TO

My fellow-laborers in the Gospel of Christ to whose care has been intrusted the training of the youth in the Sunday-schools of our land, this book is respectfully dedicated with the prayer that through their instrumentality the spirit of world-wide missions may vitalize the Church of to-morrow.

INTRODUCTION

The day is coming when the Sunday-school that has not sent some of its members to a home or foreign mission field, while at the same time numbering still others in its membership as volunteers pledged to go, will be ashamed and self-condemned. The reason why Sunday-schools generally have not yet reached this high but practicable standard is because most Sunday-school workers do not know what the Sunday-school is, and what is the real end of its effort.

For example, the Sunday-school is often spoken of as the church of to-morrow, or the child of the church, or the children's church, or as a branch or a department of the church. None of these definitions tells the whole truth. All of them are misleading.

Again, the purpose of the Sunday-school is commonly spoken of as Bible-study. And the great end of the Sunday-school is usually said to be soul-winning. Both of these statements are not only inadequate, but positively harmful in the narrowing, stultifying limitations that they impose.

The Sunday-school is not the church of to-morrow, nor a branch of the church of to-day ; it is the church engaged in the most important work that God commits to men. As the Church Teaching, the Sunday-school is the church at work in carrying out the Great Commission : making disciples, or learners, of all men.

Bible-study is, of course, only a means to the end that the Sunday-school has in view. And that end is not soul-winning ; the church would be a body of babes, untrained and useless, if it were. Soul-winning is vital ; the Sunday-school that won no souls would be a failure ; but soul-winning is the first step, not the last, in Sunday-school effort. Soul-winning is the beginning of the actual results that every true Sunday-school worker longs to see : God forbid that it should be the end. Yet many a teacher really seems to think that he has done about all he need do for a given class if he has brought the members of that class to an open confession of their Saviour !

What, then, is the end of Sunday-school work ? Character-training for service in the extension of the Kingdom. Not a selfish salvation, a saving merely of our own self-centered souls ; but a salvation for one great purpose only : power to win others to Christ, and to train them up in Christ. This is the end, the purpose, that should be held up before every pupil, young and old, saved and unsaved, in every Sunday-school in the world. You are powerless and unprofitable and lost without Christ ; you need Christ, not merely that you may be saved, but that you may make your life count for the eternal enrichment of all lives that you touch.

Where, then, does the work of missions come into the Sunday-school as this new vision reveals it? Rather, where can the work of missions be left out in such a Sunday-school? The true understanding of the church at work teaching makes it plain that the implanting of the missionary spirit so as to give it control of the life of every pupil may fairly be said to be the chief and sole purpose of the Sunday-school. Therefore if a Sunday-school fails here, it fails not only as a powerful ally of the great missionary boards, but it fails as a Sunday-school. And if the Sunday-school is the church engaged in the greatest and most important work that God permits us to do, and the end of the Sunday-school is character-training for service in the extension of the Kingdom, then if the Sunday-school fails in the proper teaching of missions, the Church of Jesus Christ is failing at its greatest and only commissioned work. That is a strong statement, but can we escape its truth?

But the church is not going to fail. The past few years have marked an awakening to this its strategic opportunity and Christ-commissioned obligation such as may well give cheer and hope to those who are blazing the way. Missions and the Sunday-school may now fairly be said to be drawing together, and doing so fast. More than one agency has been persistently at work to this end,—notably the Young People's Missionary Movement. And among the individuals whose far-sighted, thorough-going work has been both an awakener and a revealer to Sunday-school folks, Mr. George H. Trull stands out as a conspicuous and undiscouraged contributor to the solution of the problem. His efforts began with an individual church ; soon they attracted such attention that he was laid hold on to become the Sunday-school secretary of a great missionary board ; and now he places the entire church, in every denomination, under obligation by the remarkable assembling of facts that this volume presents.

Those who have thought that not much has yet been done in the practical solution of the study of missions in the Sunday-schools will be amazed at the enlightenment that these pages offer. An abundance of practical method is described, and the book treats of its subject on every side. One can come to it in entire ignorance of the theme, and lay it down with the grateful consciousness that there is scarcely a question unanswered. The why and the how of the Sunday-school's missionary activity are made plain and workable. The classified bibliography alone will be a boon to those who must constantly ask what books there are for this or that part of the work.

Best of all, it is an evidence of the spirit and permanency of this work that its heart-life—the spiritual and prayer-side—is not only not subordinated to machinery and method, but is everywhere foremost as the immediate and only reason for what is done.

CHARLES GALLAUDET TRUMBULL.

PREFACE

The following pages have been prepared with an earnest desire to offer practical suggestions to those who are seeking in reference to missions in the Sunday-school, answers to the questions, "Why? What? How?" The growing interest in world-wide evangelization and recognition that the Sunday-school has a very distinct relation to it is indicative of a quickening spiritual life and promises large achievements in the future. The Christian who to-day can say he has no interest in missions, is to be more often pitied than condemned. His normal spiritual development has been arrested. In the next generation such individuals will be the rare exception, if Sunday-school workers of to-day are but faithful to their present opportunities.

The author acknowledges his indebtedness to the late George W. Pease for much of the material in Chapter VIII, and would refer those interested in the points treated in that chapter to Mr. Pease's book, "Outline of a Bible School Curriculum." He also expresses his appreciation of the kindness of Miss Bessie Brooks, of Beaver, Pa.; the Rev. George M. Fowles, of New York, and of "The Missionary Intelligencer," of Cincinnati, for permission to reproduce some of the diagrams that appear in the Appendix.

Missions a Necessity in the Sunday-school

"The Mission of the Church is Missions."

The Key to the Situation

In the hands of Sunday-school superintendents and teachers lies the real solution of the missionary problem. They hold the key to the whole situation, and if they improve their opportunity, within a generation there will be a church whose intelligence about missions and zeal for them has never been equaled in the world's history.

There are very cogent reasons why every Sunday-school should include missions in its curriculum.

I. Its Educational Value

Missionary instruction is necessary for the highest intellectual and spiritual development of the child. Not alone does he need missionary education because of what he may do for missions, but because of what missions will do for him. It will enlarge his vision, broaden his sympathies, and develop his spiritual life as is possible in no other way. This is the more readily seen if we try to answer this question, What would a scholar miss if he did not have missions in his life?

1. He would lack a knowledge of the growth of the Kingdom of God, for the history of Christianity is the history of missions. This would mean cutting out a large part of the Bible, many of the words of Christ and of Paul.

2. He would lack acquaintance with some of the noblest characters of history, and the example of their lives for his own.

3. He would lack an intimate knowledge of conditions at home and abroad that demand the gospel as the remedy.

4. He would lack the development of a broad world-wide interest and sympathy, and a feeling of responsibility for his fellow-men.

5. He would lack the strengthening of faith through the story of the triumphs of the cross.

6. He would be ignorant of the strong apologetic for Christianity offered by Christian missions.

II. The Natural and Logical Place

The Sunday-school is the educational department of the church; whatever instruction is essential for the education of the church belongs in the Sunday-school. "If you wish to introduce any ideas into a nation's life, you must put them in the schools," was the wise injunction of Von Humboldt, the great German statesman. Just as truly, whatever ideas are to grip the church must be taught in the Sunday-school. "To reach the Sunday-school for missions means to touch the church more deeply than through any other agency."

III. The Most Impressionable Period of Life

Youth is the formative period, the time of greatest religious interest, and if the scholars are ever to be interested in missions the period of youth is the critical time to begin.

In his autobiography, James Chalmers, the missionary hero to New Guinea, tells how at the age of fifteen, when in the Sunday-school, he heard a letter read from the mission field which led him to consecrate his own life to missionary service. After reading it, the superintendent said: "I wonder if there is a boy here this afternoon who will yet become a missionary, and by and by bring the gospel to the cannibals?" Writing of it, Chalmers says: "The response of my heart was, 'Yes, God helping me, I will.' So impressed was I, that I spoke to no one, but went right away towards home. Kneeling down I prayed to God to accept of me, and make me a missionary to the heathen."

IV. Large Number Enrolled—15,000,000 in North America

There are but five and one-half millions in Young People's Societies, and in Mission Bands a much smaller number. The time, therefore, to give missionary instruction is when we have the children, and that is at the Sunday-school hour.

V. A New and Proper Perspective

If boys and girls read in the daily papers of the social conditions in the city tenements, or of the menace of a certain type of immigrants, or of atrocities on the Congo, or of riots in India, they will learn to regard these events not merely in their political aspect but in their relation to the progress of the Kingdom of God.

VI. Consciousness of the Reality of God

The God of Abraham, Samuel and David seems to many merely a God of the distant past, but far removed from the living present. The sense of his reality is lost. Missions give a new sense of his immanence, linking the God of Paton with the God of Paul, the God of Brainerd with the God of Abraham.

VII. The Influence on the Home

The interest of the children becoming aroused in missions is very likely to extend to the parents, so that they in turn will profit by the instruction given by the Sunday-school, particularly so if some home preparation is required of the pupil.

The foregoing reasons unitedly lead to this conclusion: That missions should be an essential and normal part of every Sunday-school curriculum, and not merely optional with this or that teacher and superintendent.

Questions

1. Give your own reasons in support of the statement that the key to the missionary problem is in the hands of Sunday-school superintendents and teachers of to-day.
2. State what appear to you the three strongest reasons why missions should be a part of the curriculum of every Sunday-school.
3. Why should it not be an optional matter?
4. Develop the idea that an individual needs missions because of what it will do for him.
5. State at least two other things, not mentioned in the chapter, that a scholar would lack if he had no missionary instruction.
6. Memorize the conclusion at the close of the chapter.

II

Facts and Aims

As Sunday-school workers and as Christians, we are faced by certain incontrovertible facts which we need to ponder.

First Fact.—The Obligation of the Church to Give the Gospel to the World

Christ's command is strikingly explicit: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation," and this command has never been revoked. Missions are not a question therefore of individual inclination, but of universal Christian obligation; not a mere matter of choice, but of plain obedience; not a matter for discussion, but for propagation.

Second Fact.—The Church of the Past Generations has not Completed World-Wide Evangelization

Much heroic service has indeed been rendered, but the gospel for the whole creation as the supreme duty has never been the conception nor attempt of the church at large since apostolic days. Otherwise the gospel would long ago have been given to every creature.

Third Fact.—The Unfinished Task Presents an Opportunity to the Present Generation

It is not merely an obligation, but an opportunity, for in the Christian's vocabulary these two words are synonymous. If the church of the past has not completely fulfilled Christ's command, then to the church of the present comes the opportunity.

Fourth Fact.—The Need of the Non-Christian World To-day is Very Great

One thousand million people are still in ignorance of Jesus Christ. Two infants out of every three in the world look up into the faces of mothers who can tell them no word about the world's Saviour. The reason so many are not Christians is not because they have wilfully rejected the gospel; they have never had a chance to accept it. Men may say all they like about the non-Christian religions being good enough for the heathen, and that they should not be disturbed. To such is commended a pamphlet by Mr. Robert E. Speer, entitled "The Non-Christian Religions Inadequate to Meet the Needs of Men." (To be obtained for five cents from Student Volunteer Movement, 125 East 27th street, New York.)

Fifth Fact.—The Sunday-school has a Distinct Obligation in View of the Church's Present Duty to the Unevangelized.

The Sunday-school is an integral part of the church, not a separate and distinct organization. "It is the church in its Bible teaching and studying service," says Marion Lawrance. The duty of the church for world-wide evangelization is also then the Sunday-school's, and it is significant that at the World's Sunday School Convention in Rome, in May, 1907, this obligation was recognized and declared. Few schools at the present time have, however, any adequate or systematic course of missionary instruction. We do not say that they have no missionary information presented, or that they make no offering to missionary causes, but that comparatively few have adequate and systematic courses of missionary instruction. This being the case, it is self-evident that there is an immediate need for Sunday-school superintendents and teachers to provide such instruction as will impress the school with a sense of its particular obligation to the evangelization of the world, and lead to an honest effort to meet its share of responsibility.

Definite and Worthy Aims

This leads us to inquire about our aims in our Sunday-school work. In order to secure definite results there must be definite aims. What are our aims? What satisfies us? Are we content with numbers, a large attendance, the memorizing and repeating of Scripture, the Creed and the Catechism, the recitation of the lesson of the day? All this is assuredly excellent and should be sought, but is it sufficient? Unless a scholar is led to know Christ intimately as his Saviour and Lord, and unless Christ becomes so real in his experience that he will want to make him known to others, then we are failing of our highest possibilities in our Sunday-school work.

The Sunday-school is of course the place for soul-winning, but it is also to develop Christian character and train for Christian service. This will mean that whatever else we accomplish in our work, we signally fail if the missionary spirit is not implanted and developed in the life of every scholar. Whether or not any of them actually go to the home or foreign field, can be safely left to the individual's call of God. The teacher's part is to see to it that none shall fail to recognize the Christian's obligation to world-wide evangelization, and that those who do not engage in it in the capacity of missionaries have as great an obligation as those that do, and that they should have their hands upon the missionary ropes that bind the missionaries to the home church. The Sunday-school teacher whose aim is less than this is, as the late B. F. Jacobs has said, "out of place."

Questions

1. In view of Matthew 28:20, how alone must missions be regarded by the church?
2. Did Christ make provision to relieve any of his followers from their obligation to obedience?
3. To what causes do you attribute the fact that so large a part of the world is yet unevangelized? Mention at least three.
4. Why are the non-Christian religions inadequate to meet the needs of men?
5. What do you consider the most urgent need along missionary lines in the Sunday-school?

III

A Missionary Policy for the Local Sunday-school

Education

In order to secure a Sunday-school thoroughly missionary in spirit, a definite missionary policy is essential. It must be comprehensive and adequate, and should, therefore, include at least four things: education, prayer, giving, and an effort to secure missionary recruits. Education is fundamental and upon it rest all the other points of the policy. If it is of the proper kind it will lead to intelligence, interest, prayer, gifts, and missionary activity. Without it no strong and vital missionary spirit is possible. Put in another way, missionary education is the key that will dispel ignorance, remove prejudice, overcome indifference, arouse interest, promote investigation, stimulate prayer, encourage benevolence, and provide missionaries. We cannot afford, therefore, not to use it.

Prayer

It is not sufficient, however, merely to provide instruction. It must be of such a character as to induce prayer—intelligent, definite, daily prayer for the extension of God's Kingdom in the world. The petition, "Thy Kingdom come," is to many Sunday-school scholars somewhat indefinite, but it will assume definiteness the moment one becomes intelligent as to the progress of the Kingdom, and the needs both at home and abroad.

In a conference of some thirty or forty Christian workers, the question was asked, "How many have prayed to-day for missions?" and but three or four stated that they had. The audience was then asked, "How many have offered the Lord's Prayer to-day?" and nearly all had. But the majority had offered the petition, "Thy Kingdom come," apparently mechanically, and unconscious of the fact that they were praying for missions. There is a need, therefore, for the development of definiteness and vitality in our missionary petitions that will grip the heart and conscience.

Gifts

Information about missions and prayer for them will naturally lead to gifts. We cannot pray earnestly for any cause without a desire to be the means of helping that cause. A recent editorial in The Sunday School Times says:—

"Prayer is a challenge of our honesty of purpose. It demands of us proof that we are ready to co-operate with God in effecting the end we say we desire. A small boy came into his father's room one morning with his purse in his hand, counting his money. 'What are you going to do with all that money, little man?' asked his father.

" 'I am going to spend it at the fair to-day,' replied the little boy, referring to a carnival for the benefit of the local hospital.

" 'I think if I were you,' the father said, 'I would put some of that money in my missionary bank before going to the fair. You will have a much happier day.' The little boy had two banks, one his own and the other his missionary bank, between which he was accustomed to divide his money.

"'Oh, no,' he said, 'I need all this money to spend at the fair.'

"'Very well,' observed the father, 'but let us kneel down and say our prayers before we go down to breakfast.' So they knelt down.

"The little boy was accustomed to say in his prayers, 'And bless the missionaries and the little children on the other side of the world.' The father noticed that this petition was omitted, and he called his son's attention to the fact. The little fellow resented the intrusion, and answered indignantly, 'Now, look here, father, who is saying this prayer?'

"'Well, it is your prayer,' the father answered, 'but I think you ought not to leave out the missionaries and the children on the other side of the world.'

"'But, father,' said the boy, 'I need all that money.'

"'I didn't say anything about the money,' his father said, 'but I think you ought not to leave the missionaries and the children out of your prayer.'

"So the little boy thought a moment and had his short struggle, and then prayed as he was wont to pray. When he had finished, he rose up without a word from his father, and remarked quietly, 'I guess I had better put some of that money in my missionary bank.' The little unperverted conscience had sounded the moral realities of prayer. He had no right to pray when he would not pay, and when he had prayed, the honesty of his little heart told him he must set about accomplishing his prayer."

Recruits

A complete missionary policy in the Sunday-school calls also for the consecration of life, the best gift of all. The future missionaries are in the Sunday-school classes of to-day, and it is to the Sunday-school, as well as to the home, that we must look for that kind of missionary instruction that will produce missionaries. The young people in Sunday-school are in the impressionable period of their lives; they are forming their ideals and making life choices, and in every Sunday-school, Christianity and its claims for life consecration should be urgently presented.

Questions

1. What four points should an adequate missionary policy include?
2. Upon what one point of the policy do the others all depend, and why?
3. How would you seek to develop intelligent, definite prayer for missions?
4. Trace the logical connection between information, prayer, and benevolence.
5. How can benevolence best be stimulated?
6. To secure a praying, benevolent church in the next generation, what must the Sunday-school of the present do?
7. Can the average school pray into existence and provide for their equipment and support one or more missionaries from its members?
8. Is there anything to prevent such a desirable end, as far as God is concerned? Find Scripture to show God's attitude.

IV

The Missionary Committee and its Work

The term "Missionary Committee" as herewith used has reference to those persons in charge of the development of the missionary interests of the Sunday-school.

Need of a Committee

No missionary policy, however comprehensive, is automatic. Flesh and blood must be back of it to make it effective. Who, then, shall be charged with this responsibility? A definite somebody, or an indefinite anybody? Evidently the former, and with him or her should be associated others forming a Missionary Committee or Council. In most cases the superintendent of the school should not be the chairman of the Missionary Committee, or be charged with the development of this branch of the work. His hands are already occupied with other duties. This responsibility should be given to others who have the time, the willingness, and the efficiency to devise such plans as can be most successfully carried out in the local school.

Quality

Great care should be exercised in the selection of the committee, that only those persons who are really efficient are secured. It is not absolutely necessary that they know very much about missions at the start, but they should be eager to be informed. A study of the missionary literature and helps that are now available will soon remove ignorance.

It is essential, however, that they have the cause of missions upon their hearts. It is usually a very dangerous experiment to select disinterested persons with the hope of interesting them. Better that they should display some interest first, before being entrusted with so great a responsibility as the development of interest in others.

The Missionary Committee must have persons of enthusiasm, and able to communicate it to others. Its members should be tactful, not antagonizers. They should be persons who persevere. The valuable asset of the bulldog is the quality of tenacity, his ability to hold on in face of opposition and discouragement. The quality of stick-to-it-iveness is what makes a postage stamp useful; and this trait or quality is essential in those who are members of the Missionary Committee. Persons who easily lose heart, whose enthusiasm boils over like a geyser, and whose brilliancy flashes like a meteor, are interesting, but useless on the Missionary Committee. Originality, and ability to set others to work, are additional desirable qualities. Summing up, then, the Missionary Committee should be composed of "missionaryites," persons who are intelligent, interested, enthusiastic, tactful, persevering, original, and able to lead others. All of these qualities may not be possessed by every member of the committee at the start. A beginning should be made with the best people available.

Number

The number on the committee will vary according to the size of the school and the amount of work planned. Large schools having well-equipped departments should have a representative from each department. In smaller schools there should be at least three members.

Relation to Other Missionary Organizations of the Church

The whole missionary work of the church should be well organized and properly correlated, so that each organization is in close touch with the work of the others and under the general supervision of the pastor and church officers. Some churches have a church Missionary Committee or Council, composed of a representative from each one of the missionary organizations, and of course the Sunday-school Missionary Committee should be represented on this church committee or council.

Selection and Appointment

Those who have the matter at heart, in consultation with the pastor and superintendent, should unite in the selection of the committee, recommending them for appointment. Then they should be appointed by the superintendent or in the same manner as are the other committees, so that all may recognize that the Missionary Committee is not imposed upon the school, but is necessary to the carrying out of an essential and accredited part of the school's work.

Securing the School's Adoption of Plans

After the committee has been appointed and has outlined its plans, these should be submitted to the officers and teachers for adoption. Such action carries with it the united co-operation of every teacher in making the plans effective. The missionary policy becomes then not merely the policy of the Missionary Committee, but of the school.

Duties of the Committee as a Whole

As to the duties of the committee as a whole, the most important are:—

1. To outline a comprehensive missionary policy. This should include education, prayer, giving, an effort to secure missionary recruits. Each one of these topics is given special treatment in the following chapters of this manual.

2. To plan feasible methods for making the above policy effective, and thus develop the missionary spirit. See suggestions in the chapters treating the topics above mentioned.

3. To plan the special program or exercises for each Missionary Sunday.

4. To provide thorough missionary training for the teachers, that they may be fitted to do effective work in their classes.

Duties of Individual Members

To individual members of the committee, certain specific duties should be assigned.

One should develop the spirit of prayer, securing missionary intercessors, through the use of the denominational or other prayer cycle, and by suggesting other definite topics from time to time.

Another should have charge of missionary benevolence, seeking to secure proportionate and systematic giving from every member of the school. Care should be taken to present such objects as would appeal to the natural interests of the pupils of the various grades.

Another member should have charge of the missionary library, working in conjunction with the librarian of the school. This person should see to it that not merely the newest and most interesting books are secured for the various grades, but that they are circulated and read. He should also obtain from the denominational Mission Boards suitable leaflets for distribution to the scholars, and should secure subscriptions to the missionary magazines.

Another member of the committee should have charge of the making of wall charts and maps and of suitable blackboard work.

Still another should be responsible for posting on the bulletin-board brief and interesting items, whether from the daily or religious press. Attention to these items should be called by placing over them some striking headlines. The bulletin board is one of the most valuable means of disseminating missionary information.

Another member of the committee may have charge of the constructive work which the scholars of the younger grades will be glad to do. This would include the use of the sand-table, the illustrating of missionary hymns, the making of scrap-books, or of other articles that would illustrate the course of lessons, as well as the making of quilts, the dressing of dolls, etc., for gifts to be sent to the home and foreign mission fields.

A number of these suggested activities may be looked after by the same individual, especially when the committee is composed of but three members.

Relation to Officers of the School

In the prosecution of its work, the committee should enlist the co-operation of the regularly appointed officers of the school, working through them wherever possible.

Meetings of the Committee

These should be held as frequently as occasion may demand, ordinarily at least monthly.

Reports

It is extremely important that brief written reports of the work done or contemplated by the committee should be rendered each month at the teachers'-meeting. Without this monthly survey some Missionary Committees might grow weary in well doing. The fact, however, that there is expected a monthly account of what has been done will prove an incentive to fidelity.

Questions

1. What qualities do you consider the most important for the members of the Missionary Committee to possess?
2. What general rule should guide in the number that should compose the Committee?
3. What relation should the Sunday-school Missionary Committee bear to the other missionary organizations of the church?
4. How should the Missionary Committee be selected and by whom appointed?

5. Why should the Committee secure the adoption of its policy by all the officers and teachers of the school?

6. What are the most important duties of the Committee as a whole?

7. Of the special work of the Committee to be carried on by individual members, which do you consider the most important? Why?

8. What is to be gained by working through the regularly appointed officers of the school?

Methods of Instruction

The first point of the missionary policy for the Sunday-school concerns education. As has already been pointed out, it is the foundation stone on which all else rests, and, without it, there can be no intelligent or fervent prayer, no intelligent and increasing giving, and no consecration of life to missionary service. Education along missionary lines is vital.

The method to be employed will depend largely on the local needs and conditions of each school. No one method of instruction should be universally employed, nor can it be. The method that works successfully at one time may be superseded by another at a later time in the same school; and the method that seems well adapted to one school might be ill adapted to another.

Four Methods

There are, in brief, four general methods of instruction:—

1. Interpretative.—That is, giving its natural missionary interpretation to a Bible passage which is clearly missionary in content. The Bible is a missionary book, and therein are found the missionary principles in which every school must be thoroughly grounded. “The great commission,” “the feeding of the five thousand," and other passages, clearly state the divine purpose regarding the preaching of the gospel and the extension of the Kingdom in the world. These truths should be faithfully taught as the warrant for missionary service.

2. Illustrative.—By this method one uses missionary incidents and stories to illustrate the regular Bible lesson of the day. This can be done by the teachers in their classes most successfully, and also by the superintendent from the desk when reviewing the lesson. Material may be gathered from current missionary literature, magazines, the various denominational papers, and from missionary books. The Missionary Review of the World is especially valuable for this purpose, The Record of Christian Work has a "Monthly Missionary Survey," and The Sunday School Times suggests the "missionary meaning" of each regular International lesson.

3. Supplemental.—This plan makes the missionary lesson supplemental to the Bible lesson of the day, in no sense displacing it. Some schools have a regular course in supplemental work, including Bible history, Bible geography, the structure and contents of the Bible, church history, missions, etc. Ten to fifteen minutes a Sunday are given in the class work to some one of the above subjects, and mission study thus comes in for its share, usually once a month, or on ten or twelve consecutive Sundays, as may be preferred. Sufficient time is secured for the supplemental work by adhering strictly to a time schedule, allowing ten or fifteen minutes for opening exercises, ten or fifteen minutes for the supplemental work, thirty minutes for the Bible lesson, and ten or fifteen minutes for closing exercises, according to the length of the school session, whether one hour or one hour and a quarter. This supplemental work is in some schools done in the classes, in others given from the desk, and in both cases should precede the study of the Bible lesson in the classes.

4. Substitutional.—A fourth method of giving instruction substitutes a missionary lesson for the regular lesson of the day. This plan is followed by some schools once a quarter; on review Sunday, or some other, a special missionary program or lesson being used. Other schools for a stated period, for six or eight consecutive Sundays, have pursued the study of a text-book. The Brown Memorial Presbyterian School, Baltimore, in a study of immigration, made use of "Aliens or Americans?" for the older classes and "Coming Americans" for the younger scholars, with most excellent results.

For the teachers a small pamphlet was issued, containing suggestions and showing the connection between the Scripture lessons and the lessons in the text-books. Leaflets were prepared for the scholars of the various grades, giving titles and golden texts to accompany the missionary lessons. To quote from the Teachers' Pamphlet: "The Scripture lessons and supplemental readings have been chosen to present a course in missions. The Bible is the great text-book of missions. Missionary instruction is a part of the child's religious education, for which the Sunday-school exists. We must make a vital connection between the Scripture teaching and the practical activities which we try to suggest in the study of immigration conditions. The Scripture passages may be taught as a text at the beginning of the lesson or as a clinching truth at the end. The selections are:—

“The Great Commission (Matt. 28:16-20; Mark 16:14-20).

“The Beginning of Gentile Christianity (Acts 10:34-44).

“The Call of the First Apostles (Matt. 4:18-25).

“Two Great Missionary Parables of Christ (Matt. 13:31-33).

“Christ’s Own Vision of the Need (Matt. 9:35-10:1).

Lesson: The Call of the First Apostles (Matt. 4 : 18-25).

Supplementary Reading: Acts 26:1-23.

GOLDEN TEXT: “Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him” (Matt. 4:19, 20).

“Coming Americans,” Chapter II, “Uncle Sam takes hold.”—Show how certain definite missionaries at the ports of entry are fishers of men; as, for instance, Pastor Vanek, or Sister Bozenka Yursik. The reality of a story which is “all true” appeals to children of the junior age.

Tell how largely the Christmas entertainment of the Henry Watson Children’s Aid Society, the Newsboys’ Christmas Eve Supper, the Salvation Army Christmas Dinners, etc., apply to foreign children in Baltimore. To make this chapter vivid, use some device; for example, let each child in class pretend he is an immigrant child, arriving at the port, describing the home country from which he came, his hopes of America, etc. If possible, go to the entry place at Locust Point or Ellis Island, and have some fresh description of new immigrants given by yourself or some member of the class.

"Aliens, or Americans?" Chapter III.—"Legislation and Distribution." Show how our call to apostleship makes us approach these national problems in the missionary spirit. If you have not been on an ocean steamer, or at any immigrant dock, read "Imported Americans," by Broughton Brandenburg, for a description of the steerage and landing.

At the end of the pamphlet is given a list of valuable reference books.

During the two months of the course the teachers met each week under competent leadership to discuss the lesson for the following Sunday. A special committee selected hymns suitable for each lesson. A committee of scholars scanned the papers and magazines for clippings on immigration, to be posted on a bulletin-board. Each Sunday, in addition to the work in the classes, there was a brief talk from the desk on the day's topic by some one especially appointed for the purpose. Charts and maps were hung around the room. Class scrap-books were prepared by the scholars.

The interest throughout the course was kept up to a high point and the emphasis was placed always on the necessity of bringing the immigrants to Christ. The playground work, settlements and free kindergartens, supported and manned by members of the Brown Memorial Church, were held up to the scholars as practical forms of Christian work with which to help the foreigners. The Children's Club and Girls' Club, formed largely from the members of the Sunday-school, did a fine work. Both superintendent and teachers regard the course as highly beneficial, creating a strong missionary atmosphere in the church and parish.

The substitutional method has also been successfully employed with "Uganda's White Man of Work" and "The Life of John G. Paton" in Intermediate classes, and with "The Challenge of the City" in adult classes. This method is used as an application of Bible principles and teachings to present-day conditions, life, and duty. The study of missions is essentially an exercise that promotes spiritual growth and development, and deals with the workings and activities of the Spirit of God, whether that record is found in apostolic or modern missions. That which ministers to the spiritual development of the child, by illustrating in modern life biblical principles, has a rightful and necessary place in the Sunday-school curriculum.

Relative Value of Class and Platform Instruction

It has already been intimated that instruction may be given either from the platform or in the class. In the former case, the information is given by one or more persons, according as it is in the form of an address, a drill, questions, an exercise, etc. The class instruction is given at close range to the pupils, who have had in advance assigned work which they are expected to prepare.

Evidently this latter method is to be preferred from the educational standpoint, because it calls forth the mental activity of every member of the school, and each one profits by the amount of effort expended. The address or exercise from the platform may be interesting and profitable, but provides less mental stimulus for the school at large than a method requiring personal preparation on the part of every scholar.

The Simplest Method with which to Begin

The simplest way to begin, however, is by introducing the missionary idea into the school's worship. This requires no extra time, but simply utilizes the regular period of the opening exercises. Every Sunday-school in these exercises uses prayer, hymns and Scripture. Most appropriately from time to time a definite missionary petition should be offered, hymns and Scripture of missionary significance made use of. If the missionary idea is presented in this natural normal way the scholars will soon begin to realize that the very essence of the gospel is missions. Missionary mottoes, charts and pictures may also be placed on the walls and aid greatly in creating a missionary atmosphere. In addition to the above the superintendent, pastor, member of the missionary committee, or some other competent person, may from the platform tell a missionary incident or story, or may give a map drill, familiarizing the school with the location of its denominational as well as with world-wide missions. He may make use of curios, charts, pictures, etc., as facts presented to the eye as well as the ear make a far deeper impression. An occasional stereopticon lecture is also a valuable means of instruction, and might be given some evening during the week. A speaker from outside, to give a special missionary address, might be secured once in a while, but it is far better to develop the workers in the local school than to depend on persons from outside. There are special exercises in which one or more scholars may have part from the platform. "The Missionary Speaker," containing 250 selections suitable for readings and recitations and adapted for the various grades, is excellent for this purpose. Other books of similar nature may be secured from the denominational Boards. "Missionary Programs, No. 2, has six large pictures, 25 x 30 inches, for platform use, with accompanying descriptive material. There are three home topics, "Indians and the Typewriter," "Boys of the Street," "A Rag Picker's Home;" and three foreign, "The Dog That Preached a Missionary Sermon," Burma; "A Missionary at a Wayside Shrine," Japan; "A Chinese Student," China.

Number 3 also contains six large pictures, as does No. 2. The home mission topics are, "How the Sea Otter Helped to Bring the Gospel to the Great Northwest," "A Cabin Home in the Mountains," "Why the Immigrants Come"; the foreign mission topics are, "Kim Chang Sik, the First Christian Preacher in Korea," "Mohammedan Women," "John G. Paton, Missionary to the New Hebrides."

All of the above can be obtained from the denominational Boards. "Talks on Africa" contains six splendid outlines, together with illustrations for the blackboard and appropriate recitations. It can be secured from the Foreign Missions Library, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, for 25 cents each.

While instruction from the platform is an excellent way to introduce missionary information to the Sunday-school, yet it should not continue to be the only means employed, but instruction in the classes should be given as well, so that on Missionary Sunday every member of the school will have made preparation and thus receive the benefit that can come only as a result of personal effort.

A combination of platform instruction with that given in the class is very desirable. The former supplements the latter admirably, particularly if in the closing exercises of the school on missionary Sunday emphasis is laid upon some special teaching brought out in the classes. (See Chapter XV.)

Overcoming Difficulties

Although the need of some form of systematic missionary instruction in the Sunday-school may be admitted, there are, however, in the minds of some, what seem to them very practical difficulties. There are but two things to do with difficulties: face them, and master them.

First Difficulty.—Lack of Time

It is said that the Sunday-school session is already so full that it is next to impossible to crowd anything else into it, and that there is no time for missionary instruction. It will, of course, depend upon what form of instruction is chosen as to how the difficulty is to be met. If the plan of giving the instruction from the desk is used, five minutes can certainly be found each Sunday in any well-regulated school for this purpose. The opening or closing exercises can be shortened five minutes to make this possible. Sufficient time can readily be secured by omitting one hymn altogether, or by singing fewer stanzas of one or two of the hymns. If the illustrative method is used in the classes, the instruction will be given during the regular lesson period.

If the instruction is to be given as supplemental work in the classes, then in case the school session is one hour in length, ten minutes can be given to the opening exercises, ten minutes to the missionary lesson, thirty minutes for the Bible lesson and ten minutes for the closing exercises. If the session is one hour and a quarter in length, fifteen minutes can be devoted to the opening exercises, fifteen minutes to the missionary lesson or other supplemental work as it comes in the regular curriculum of the school, thirty minutes for the Bible lesson, and fifteen minutes to closing exercises. Some schools prefer a missionary program once a month, conducted in the time usually devoted to the regular opening and closing exercises. Still others have a missionary program once a quarter, devoting the whole session to it.

The question of lack of time is no insuperable objection to any school that really wishes to provide missionary instruction. The school that runs on schedule time can easily accomplish it. Other schools should adopt at once strict punctuality as to opening and closing and the conduct of the whole program; and it will at once become manifest how perfectly easy and possible it is to accomplish much more in the given time of the school session than was ever possible without system and punctuality.

Second Difficulty.—The Bible Should be the Sole Text-Book of the Sunday-school, and Nothing Else Should be Introduced.

While the Bible must always be the chief text-book of the Sunday-school, yet for the better grasping of its truths and for the illustration of its teachings we must have in addition other text-books and manuals which will present its doctrines and principles, its history and geography, in systematic form. Missionary study does not displace the Bible; it simply centers attention on one of its most important teachings, and illustrates it with striking facts. Says Dr. Forbush in a recent article: "Missions are not a substitute for, but an extension of, the Bible. The Bible is chiefly a book of biography, and missions are an extension of Bible biography. They are the continuation of the book of Acts. 'I never knew the Bible until I knew Judson,' said one."

Third Difficulty.—Lack of Material for Use

The question that rises as a real difficulty with some concerns the proper material for use. This was indeed a difficulty some years ago, but no longer is this the case. At the present time there is an increasing amount of material for instruction in all grades, from the Primary up. (See Appendix B.) Much of it is undenominational in character, and can be readily used in any school. Full suggestions regarding it are given in Chapter VIII. Inquiries should also be made of one's own denominational Mission Boards.

Fourth Difficulty.—Expense of Proper Equipment

This seems a very practical difficulty in some schools. There are few churches who will not respond to a just appeal for financial help for the Sunday-school if it is made clear that the school has an educational ideal, and, in order to meet it, requires proper equipment.

Such an equipment is a greater necessity even than the sexton. Parents provide for the secular education of their children, and, as members of the church, should be willing to supply the necessary funds for the adequate equipment of the Sunday-school. In some churches the congregation knows very little about the actual work that is being conducted in the Sunday-school, and there is need for a closer intimacy. At least annually an accurate statement should be made to a congregational meeting as to just what the Sunday-school is doing, its courses of study, the effectiveness of its teaching force, its growth and influence in the community, and the amount of money required for its maintenance. When the congregation realizes that the school is being conducted along effective lines, employing approved educational methods, sufficient financial support will be recognized as a positive necessity. If a school supports itself without aid from the church, it is equally important that at least an annual statement should be made to the congregation of its aims and activities, and if additional money is needed for missionary equipment, the congregation should be given the opportunity to provide it. If this is impracticable, probably the school itself by an extra effort could meet any demands of the Missionary Committee; but the church should be first to realize its obligation in the matter. The expense need be very little to begin with. Information concerning equipment and a selected list of missionary books will be found in Appendices B and C.

Fifth Difficulty.—Lack of Properly Qualified Teachers

This difficulty is best met by providing a normal class for missionary instruction under properly qualified leadership. Persons who have had experience in mission study classes make good missionary teachers in the Sunday-school. A Philadelphia school has inaugurated the plan of gathering its teachers at the close of the Sunday-school session, once a month, for a thorough study of the missionary topics to be taught in the classes the following month. A New York school, where only a monthly teachers'-meeting was possible, had a preview of the succeeding month's missionary lessons given by one of the members of the Missionary Committee. In this particular school the method of missionary instruction was supplemental class work for ten consecutive Sundays.

If the missionary instruction is given in the class, it is of vital importance that the teachers should be qualified for their work, "for," as has been truly said, "whatever is to be taught the scholars must first be put in the teachers." One of the most important duties of the Missionary Committee, therefore, is to provide for the missionary training of the teachers. It will be found of inestimable advantage, in addition to preparation for the teaching of specific lessons, to provide general missionary literature for the teachers' use. An acquaintance with interesting missionary books will give a fund of information to any teacher that will be simply invaluable. For suggested books see Appendix C.

Questions

1. Are difficulties to master us or to be mastered?

2. What qualities of character are needed to master them?

Mention at least three.

3. What seem to you the chief difficulties, if any, that need to be overcome regarding the development of missions in your Sunday-school?

4. What relation do modern missions bear to the book of Acts?

5. Why should the church support, wholly or in part, its own Sunday-school? Give three reasons.

6. What advantages are to be secured by bringing at least an annual report of the condition of the Sunday-school to the attention of the congregation?

7. What do you consider the best method of securing efficient teachers of missions in the Sunday-school?

The Non-Missionary School

It has been well said that "every great reform was once the idea of an individual." Before there can be missionary interest in any Sunday-school some individual must see the need and attempt to meet it. One individual on fire for missions will sooner or later enkindle others. It may happen that there is altogether a non-missionary atmosphere in the school. There may never have been any systematic missionary instruction. The sole missionary information has been given by an occasional missionary or missionary speaker. Some spasmodic contributions may have been made with more or less regularity, but when they were sent off, all obligation to the missionary cause was dismissed from the mind. This is the situation the sole missionary enthusiast may happen to face in certain localities, and perhaps in addition an apathetic pastor, an indifferent and non-progressive superintendent, and—"like priest like people"—indifferent apathetic teachers.

The Non-Missionary Superintendent

The first thing to do is to secure the co-operation of the superintendent and his promotion of the missionary idea. If he is not particularly interested in missions, it may not be altogether his fault. He doubtless grew up in a Sunday-school where missionary instruction was unknown, and so he does not know anything about missions except what he has read in the book of Acts; and it has never occurred to him to relate the modern missionary movement to the work of apostolic days. His time is so occupied that he has given little attention to specific missionary instruction in the school. Perhaps he and the school have gotten in a rut. Now a rut is fatal to progress. Some one has defined it as a grave with both ends knocked out. It is the abiding place of that superintendent and school who are opposed to progress. Eventually the rut will form a grave and enclose both school and superintendent. Better, however, bury the superintendent than the school. But better still is it to arouse the superintendent so that he will be the active helper, if not the leader, of the missionary movement in the Sunday-school.

Some Suggestions

But how to do it, is the question. "Advance on your knees," was Neesima's motto and a good one. Pray that the superintendent may be favorably inclined, and then seek an interview with him, laying before him the burden that is on your heart and conscience, that somehow, some way, the question of missions and the obligation of your school to the non-Christian world should be adequately met. Ask for suggestions from him, rather than make any of your own at first. Seek to draw him out rather than to impose upon him some preconceived plan of your own. Let him see that the whole question is a burning one to you and not one to be lightly esteemed. If he points out difficulties, as he very likely will, be prepared to show how they can be overcome. If he does not warm up sufficiently in the first interview, secure from him the promise to join you in definite daily prayer for more light and wisdom from above, and make an appointment for another interview at an early date. Meanwhile, continue in prayer that God will put the burden of this question upon the superintendent's heart as well as upon your own. Be careful, too, to put in your superintendent's hands some literature that will give him light, exacting the promise that he will read it before your next interview. "Holding the Ropes," by Miss Brain, or "Missions in the Sunday-school," by Miss Hixson, are recommended. Lack of interest on the part of the superintendent and others is due more often to lack of knowledge than to any other cause. No one is interested in topics of which he is ignorant. The superintendent must therefore, be informed, and when he sees the actual need for something 'to be done, in most cases he will not assume the rôle of an obstructionist.

There are some superintendents who will be leaders in the missionary movement; others who will co-operate in the plans initiated by others; others who will have a sympathetic interest, but who cannot be relied on for any active co-operation; and still a few others who will actually oppose any effort along missionary lines. If the suggestions above offered do not in due time lead to the securing of the co-operation of the last-named class, then prayer should be offered that God would bring to the superintendency of the school a man after his own heart. The obstructionist committed in prayer to God will either be reconstructed or removed.

Questions

1. How is any needed reform secured?
2. What qualities are essential in a person who wishes to secure the co-operation of another in any project?
3. How would you proceed, in the wisest way, to secure the introduction of mission study into a school having no missionary instruction? Outline a plan with a specific school in mind.

VIII

Education—Courses of Instruction

Having considered the various methods of instruction that may be employed, our next inquiry is regarding the material to be used. In every Sunday-school there are pupils of all ages, from the primary department to the adult. While missions should be taught to all, both the subject matter and the manner of its presentation will radically differ according to the grade.

"Our aim," says Dr. T. H. P. Sailer, "should be to develop missionary attitudes and habits. It is certainly not merely to impart general missionary information. That is only a means to the end, and often a very inadequate means. By attitudes I mean the frame of mind, the disposition we come to have toward certain things. These attitudes rest on impulses, either instinctive or acquired. Habits are formed by the expression of these attitudes in action." He also points out the need of knowing the controlling impulses in each grade in order to utilize them in the formation of right habits. He then continues, "We should remember on the one hand that habits not resting on impulses will have no vitality; on the other hand, that impulses not crystallized into habits are simply wasted. Teaching should concern itself mainly with securing attitudes rather than imparting information. This does not mean that we should always lead up to a moral or application. Attitudes are often more effective because subtly suggested. The best missionary exercise is that in which formal application is unnecessary."

Without going into detail, it is essential that we know something of the natural characteristics and interests of the different stages of growth, or nascent periods as they are called, in order to provide the proper missionary material.

GRADED MATERIAL AND ITS USE.

The Cradle Roll

From the cradle to the grave the missionary atmosphere should be breathed and the missionary spirit has its place. As the Sunday-school claims the very youngest children of the household, placing their names upon the Cradle Roll and thus identifying them with the school from their earliest infancy, so the Missionary Committee should see to it that their names are enrolled as Little Light-Bearers. Cards for enrolment can be procured from the Women's Boards of Missions of the Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian Churches, at their respective headquarters.

Of course no missionary instruction can be attempted with such little ones, but enrolment as Little Light-Bearers will start them on their career of missionary interest and education, and the parents will become interested and will be glad to have a mite-box in which they will put from time to time missionary offerings in behalf of their child. It is a good plan, when the school has any special missionary program, such as at Easter, Christmas, or at other set times during the year, for the Missionary Committee to send a personal note to the parents of each Little Light-Bearer, advising them of the special occasion, and calling attention to the fact that their child is enrolled as a Little Light-Bearer and on the Cradle Roll, and thus, being a member of the school, a special invitation is sent for him or her to be present with the parents on the particular missionary occasion. An envelope should be enclosed and statement made that all the members of the school, including the Light-Bearers, are invited to bring or send a special thank-offering to help send the gospel light to little children across the sea who have never heard of Jesus Christ. This was tried with great success in a city school one Easter, nearly all the parents of children on the Cradle Roll responding by note and by an offering of from $1 to $5 each.

A suggested letter for parents is herewith given. It should be signed by the Chairman of the Missionary Committee or Missionary Superintendent, and by the Superintendent of the Cradle Roll:—

Dear Mrs. _____

Next Sunday being Easter Day, we are to observe it in the Sunday-school of our church very joyously. The exercises will be largely of a missionary character. It is hoped that every member of the school may be present. We wish to extend a special invitation to —— (here insert the child's name) whose name is on the Cradle Roll of the school, and who is also a Missionary Light-Bearer, to come, as a part of the exercises will be especially adapted to very little folks. We also include in the invitation yourself and Mr. ——— (here naming the husband). An envelope is enclosed for a thank-offering to be devoted to the giving of the gospel to those in the far-off lands who have never heard of Christ. The offering may be brought next Sunday or sent to the treasurer of the school, Mr. ———, ——— Street.

Very cordially yours, _____

Beginners' Department—Ages 4 to 6 Years

Characteristics.—The chief characteristics of this period of childhood are selfishness, activity, imitation, imagination, and curiosity. "This selfishness," says George W. Pease, "manifests itself in many ways; in anger, when his wishes are interfered with by others; in envy, when he wishes things which he sees others possess; in jealousy, when he desires for himself the attentions paid to others. But to counterbalance somewhat this selfishness we find in the child the germs of altruism. Selfishness tends to isolation, but children are naturally sociable and do not like to be alone. Selfishness is thus somewhat checked by the desire for companionship. Generosity and the desire to please are natural impulses of most children, and both of these tend to counteract to a limited extent the effect of selfishness. While we cannot expect to make unselfishness a dominant characteristic in very young children, still our course of instruction should be planned so as to provide for a natural development of whatever germs of altruism may be present."

A second characteristic of this period is activity.

How often do we hear the expression, "That child is never still." If he were, except when asleep, he would be abnormal. The natural state for a healthy child is activity.

Another characteristic is imitation, chiefly of adults, but also of other children and of animals. The teacher's example is powerful at this period, for the child imitates him, and even before the age of four it has acquired habits of reverence, respect, politeness, or their opposites, largely through imitation. At this early age the habit is purely physical and possesses no moral character.

Again, the period of early childhood is characterized by vivid imagination. The child builds air-castles and lives largely in the land of "make-believe." The fact that children are so imaginative is a great aid to the teacher. With older ones, word pictures can easily be drawn, and imagination will fill in the details. With younger ones, a picture or an object is an added help. A few lines on the blackboard will represent a shepherd and his flock of sheep. It is quite unnecessary to make a completed picture; the mere lines are sufficient and imagination does the rest. "This strange power," says Miss Marianna Brown, "we must appreciate, feed and train, if we wish our children in after life to believe in the unseen, and to live above the dead level of materialism."

We should also mention curiosity. A child is a veritable interrogation point. He has questions about everything, which is but natural, for it is his chief means of gaining knowledge. He lives in a world of wonder, he is surrounded by things he does not understand. Therefore his first question is, "What?" and his next "Why?" and "How?" He wants to know what things are, their origin, and their use and value.

Interests.—Now what are the natural interests of this period of early childhood? Very briefly, an opportunity for activity, manifesting itself largely in imitative play, and a desire for the satisfaction of curiosity. He is fond of the folklore and fairy story. Objects and pictures make a strong appeal.

Material for Instruction.—In our instruction, then, we must be governed by the characteristics and natural interests of the children to be taught. In the regular International Course of Beginners' Lessons in the Sunday-school there is a treatment of the missionary idea under the themes, "Giving," "Kindness," "Helpfulness." These topics can, of course, be illustrated by such missionary material as seems wise to the teacher; by the telling of stories, and by the use of pictures and objects.

It is the spirit of helpfulness and of sympathy that must be developed at this age, and close at hand in line with the child's experience, rather than an attempt to teach very much about the actual needs in heathen lands. But it is important that the feelings should be educated properly at this early age, and started along right lines, if the true missionary spirit is to develop easily and naturally later.

The teacher of the Beginners' Department in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Sunday-school, New York City, has had remarkable success in teaching missions.

She says, "I do believe in missions in the Beginners' Department, and I say that after having taught them three years. My little people earn their 'special' offering, and take a real and intelligent interest in every Sabbath giving service. It never seems to grow old with them, and I know that I have every child with me when we pray for the children in the Far West whom Mr. Lewis is teaching, and for the children far over the 'Blue Sea.'" (Mr. Lewis is a missionary in Minnesota, to whose support this school has long contributed.)

Primary Department—Ages 6 to 8 Years

In the Primary Department there is an opportunity for further development of the spirit of sympathy and helpfulness commenced with the Beginners. The educational aim of this period is the culture of the instinct feelings.

Characteristics.—The child in this period of life has many of the same characteristics he possessed in the earlier period. Activity, imitation, imagination and curiosity are still strong. The social instinct now becomes more marked and tends to counteract the selfishness before prominent. The child no longer wants to play by himself, but with other children. Unless imagination is properly controlled, the growth of fear due to it increases greatly. Teasing and bullying are also common characteristics. It is the memory age.

Interests.—Curiosity still being a characteristic, the child of this period is interested in the origin, causes and reasons of things. Along the literary line, the fairy and folklore stories still appeal; also animal stories and the stories true to life in which the human element is prominent. Pictures and objects also appeal as in the earlier period.

During the primary age children have little idea of space or time relations; hence there should be no emphasis on the geographical or historical elements of missionary study. "The reasoning powers are not sufficiently developed to be appealed to to any great extent. The teaching must be largely suggestive and by analogies." Interesting incidents or events brightly told in story form, illustrated by pictures and objects, are the needs. The aim should be to teach the boys and girls to view the world as an enlarged family, and that not alone at home, but throughout the wide, wide world, they have brothers and sisters in whose welfare they should be concerned.

Material for Instruction.—The instruction should be chiefly by stories, pictures, and objects. Abundant material is available.

For stories a book that is simply fascinating is "The Great Big World; or, A Missionary Walk in the Zoo," published by The Church Missionary Society of London. It can be obtained from the Foreign Missions Library, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, for 70 cents, postpaid. In imagination the girls and boys are taken to the Zoo and there they see all the wonderful animals. A trip is then taken to the lands from which these animals came—India, Africa, Greenland, etc.—and with eyes and ears wide open the children note many marvelous things, among them the need there is for missionary effort in the various lands. So skilfully is the missionary touch brought in that one becomes interested in missions without knowing it. Just enough is told in the very brief chapters to whet the appetite for more. Here are the striking titles of some of them. "On the Camel's Back," "A Visit to the Crocodiles," "In the Lion's Den," "A Peep at the Snakes," "In Monkeyland," etc. The substance of any of the stories can be told by the teacher in from three to five minutes. Another interesting book dealing wholly with one country, is "Children in Blue, and What They Do," describing life in China. It is a connected story and a chapter can be told in story form each Sunday. This book can also be obtained from the Foreign Missions Library for 60 cents, postpaid. Miss Jane Andrews' book, "Seven Little Sisters Who Live on the Round Ball That Floats in the Air," and its sequel, "Each and All," while not distinctly missionary in character, yet describe child-life admirably in foreign lands, and thus arouse an interest in the children who live across the seas. The books are published by Ginn & Co., New York, for 50 cents each. "The Little Cousin Series" is also good, describing life and customs of children in lands afar. They are published by L. P. Page & Co., of Boston, at 60 cents each. Other books are being constantly issued and the Primary teacher should keep in touch with her denominational Mission Board in order to learn of the most recent literature.

Pictures can also now be obtained in great numbers, and illustrated postcards, beautifully colored, depicting scenes in the home and foreign fields. The Orient Picture Company, Ford Building, Boston, and most denominational Mission Boards publish a splendid selection of pictures on all mission fields.

For object-lessons the curio boxes on Japan, Africa, and the American Indian, with accompanying booklets, giving material for ten or a dozen lessons, are simply invaluable. Each set contains two dolls, a native house, and articles which illustrate the home, social, and religious life among the respective peoples. These can be obtained from the denominational Boards at $1.50 each.

A sand-tray is also of great value to the Primary Department, and even for Juniors. By means of it scenes and conditions in non-Christian lands may be made graphic and realistic. An ordinary box, $2\frac{1}{2}$ x 4 or 5 feet, with sides about 6 inches high, will suffice, but it will be better to get a common kitchen table, cut off the legs and turn it upside down. The bottom should be painted blue, or a piece of glass be inserted to represent water, and common sand or paper pulp may be used for the modeling.

For Home Use.—In addition to the stories, pictures and objects used in the class, there is some excellent material for home use. "Pictures Worth Painting from Far-off Fields" (40 cents), presents missionary pictures to be colored with crayon. "An Indian Village" (60 cents), is a game showing the life and customs of an inland village in India. A set of eight Chinese rag dolls with accompanying stories (75 cents), will appeal strongly. "A Chinese Street" (75 cents), contains all the things necessary for making small models of a street in a town of South China, and of the people who live and walk in it. The figures are to be cut out, colored and set up according to directions.

Junior Department—Ages 9 to 12 Years

Characteristics.—During the Junior period, physical development is slow. "The brain at the beginning of the period has attained nearly its full mature weight." It is the time of the growth of the associative fibers. As in the earlier period, the child has not yet learned the power of continued concentration, but he is beginning to use his reasoning powers. "Towards the close of the period the critical spirit is developing, leading to questionings for fuller information and a demand for proofs of statements made." Conscience is now becoming more active and exercises greater control over the life.

The child is influenced greatly at this period by examples, especially of other girls and boys, and much care should be exercised as to his companions. "The altruistic impulses become somewhat stronger in all normal children, these tending to weaken the spirit of selfishness so manifest in early life." "The respect for law in its general form, not simply as embodied in personal commands, increases somewhat during these years." Christ's authority in the life should now be emphasized, and stress should be laid upon the necessity of implicit obedience to the great commission to give the gospel to every creature.

This is distinctly the memory period. It is also the habit-forming period, and the teacher should therefore seize the opportunity to inculcate the habits of prayer for, and proportionate giving to, missions.

Interests.—"The interest in the casual idea increases" chiefly in the lines of science and history. Girls and boys want to know about the various wonders which they observe in nature. It is the time when they are interested in games, manual work and in making "collections" of various things, such as stamps, coins, eggs, etc. The fairy and folklore story now give way to an interest in history, chiefly in biography. The hero must be true to life and not an imaginative one, and the story must be full of action.

Material for Instruction.—During this period the history and geography of missions should be taught, and the customs and manners in non-Christian lands be described. Constant use should be made of maps, charts, diagrams, pictures and curios. The biographies of great missionaries will be read with eager interest, provided they are well written and present men of heroic action. The interest will lie rather in their accomplishments than in their characters. Deeds performed are what appeal to the Junior age. This is the period, too, when some of the "cruder conceptions of the preceding years may be corrected, and when the government of God in love through law may be more clearly pointed out."

Individual Lesson Preparation.—Juniors are quite old enough to make some preparation themselves of the material given them, and should be expected to do so. Many of them like to give missionary recitations, or to take part in some special missionary program. If the instruction is given in the class, rather than from the platform, a printed lesson in leaflet or booklet form can be prepared at home. Such a lesson forms the basis for class questioning and discussion just as does the Bible lesson.

"The Missionary Speaker" and other books of like character, already mentioned in chapter V, page 26, give suitable material for recitations and platform work for the scholars. For class work and home preparation there are leaflets or text-books issued by a number of the denominational Boards, notably the Baptist, Episcopalian, Methodist, Presbyterian and United Presbyterian, and by The Sunday School Times Company, Philadelphia. Inquiries should be made at their respective headquarters.

Scrap-books and Manual Work.—It will be of great value to have each scholar make a missionary scrap-book in which he may put pictures and small outline maps illustrating missionary lessons. He may also note down special points which the teacher suggests. Instead of individual scrap-books there may be a class scrap-book, each member of the class being responsible in turn for writing up a missionary lesson and putting in the illustrations. The individual book, however, is preferable, and as an incentive to faithful work on the part of the scholars the teacher should also make one. At the close of the school year there may be an exhibition of these books. No scholar can prepare such a scrap-book without gaining a great deal of missionary information and profit. Other manual work should be encouraged, such as the construction of native houses, sedan chairs, ancestral tablets, totem poles, which may be made by boys fond of carpentry work from descriptions furnished them or from pictures. For suggestions teachers should secure the Rev. M. S. Littlefield's book, "Hand-work in the Sunday-school," published by the Sunday School Times Company.

The sand-tray, already referred to as part of the equipment for the Primary Department, may be profitably used with the Juniors. The geographical setting of the missionary lessons can by means of it be graphically taught.

Stereoscope.—The stereoscope and stereograph pictures will also be found of great value. The former costs 75 cents, and the latter, in sets, 75 cents each. One set on China has recently been published by the Young People's Missionary Movement, and others are in preparation. Orders may be sent to the denominational Boards.

Intermediate Department—Ages 13 to 16 Years

Characteristics.—This is the beginning of the adolescent age, and one of the most critical periods of life. Boyhood and girlhood are left behind as the threshold of manhood and womanhood is approached. It is a period of rapid physical growth, and consequently is often characterized by awkwardness, shyness, and more or less reserve. "It is the time," says Pease, "of a physiological new birth out of childhood into manhood and womanhood, and of a psychological birth from egotism and isolation to altruism and society." To be regarded as children is greatly disliked, and there is a strong desire to be thought manly and womanly. This leads to the forming of ideals and of efforts to become like them.

Interests.—"The predominant literary interest is in legendary heroes, pioneers, and heroes in history." "There are strong impulses to do great things." It is the period of hero worship. The "gang spirit" now becomes manifest, and there is loyalty to the club, team or organization. The preference is for team rather than for individual games.

Material for Instruction.—The material for instruction should be largely biographical, laying emphasis upon the idea of service to others. This will make a strong appeal to adolescence. A splendid biography of Alexander Mackay, entitled "Uganda's White Man of Work," has been prepared to meet the special needs of the Intermediate grade. Also "Under Marching Orders," the life of Mary Porter Gamewell, missionary to China, by Ethel D. Hubbard. Both can be obtained from the denominational Boards, 35 cents in paper, 50 cents in cloth. "Missionary Studies for the Sunday-school" (single copies 20 cents, postpaid), can be obtained from The Sunday School Times Company, 1031 Walnut Street, Philadelphia. There are three series, and they are catalogued in Appendix B.

Impersonations

Impersonations of graphic scenes in the lives of missionaries have been used with excellent results in the Intermediate grade. For example, in "Uganda's White Man of Work," the interview between Mutesa and Stanley, the explorer, affords a splendid opportunity for two boys to impersonate these characters, and to hold such a conversation as they imagine the men themselves held in their first interview. Of course, sufficient material is given in the book of the actual interview to make it unnecessary for the boys to make the scene wholly imaginary. To attempt, however, to reproduce this scene from Central Africa makes it vivid and realistic to all and has a distinct educational value.

There are other scenes in "Uganda's White Man of Work," in "The Life of John G. Paton," and in many other missionary books which lend themselves to this treatment. Such impersonations require no costuming or other dramatic elements in order to make them effective. They may even be used successfully in an individual class, if not desirable from the platform before the whole school. An attractive entertainment could be given on some week-night, when scenes from some missionary book, as above mentioned, could be arranged as a series of very interesting tableaux or impersonations.

The First Baptist Church of Batavia, N. Y., planned a most profitable "Missionary Evening," using impersonations to excellent advantage. The program follows:

1. Songs by a chorus of twenty girls, dressed in Chinese costumes.
2. "What it means to be a Chinese girl and woman," by a young woman in Chinese costume, using as a basis "Women of the Middle Kingdom."

3. "China's Only Hope," a brief address by a young man dressed as a Chinese student. He used the book "China's Only Hope," but of course gave a Christian solution.

4. "The Sorrow of the Famine," in which a young married man comes upon the platform with his wife and baby and cooking and eating utensils in a wheelbarrow; he puts down his burden in the center of the platform, turns to the audience and tells them how he left his home and went to one of the cities where relief was being given, and how he has been sent home again because of the menace of the starving multitude clamoring for food, and how there is nothing before him and his family but sure starvation; he then takes up his wheelbarrow and goes off the platform.

5. Exercise, "A Chinese Conversation," in costume.

6. Recitation, a story based on the death of a Chinese woman.

7. Tableaux, by girls in costume, portraying scenes in life. Colored lights were used.

8. Phonograph records of Chinese music—a solo and a band piece.

9. Stereopticon slides of the new lecture on China of the Missionary Union, not reading the complete lecture, but running the slides through quite rapidly and giving a word of explanation with reference to each picture. A young man dressed in costume explains the pictures, telling the audience that he wishes to show them some of the scenes from his country.

10. All of the audience was then invited to the church parlors to partake of Chinese tea, served by Chinese maidens.

There were attractively printed tickets and programs with hand-made Chinese characters upon them, and every one taking part in the entertainment was in Chinese costume and the decorations were Chinese in character. The aim was not only to furnish a pleasant evening, but to give a vivid picture of China and her needs.

Senior Department—Ages 16 to 19 Years

Characteristics.—Says George W. Pease: "Most of the characteristics of the youth or early adolescent period continue to manifest themselves in this later period, although some of them lose their strength, while others continue their development. Owing to the rapid and strong development of the reasoning powers, there results a strengthening of the spirit of independence and a lessening of the direct influence of the teacher and companions through suggestion. The teacher at this time must depend more upon guiding the young man by an appeal to his reason than by an appeal to his affections or by an authoritative presentation of truth which is to be accepted without question.

"The advance from selfishness to unselfishness is steady and strong, and during these years the altruistic emotions are likely to become dominant. Under normal conditions, the young man will realize the importance of identifying himself with the larger social life of which he forms a part, and will expend himself freely in the service of others.

"Naturally the imitative tendency is very much weakened. The individual now sets up his own standard of life and conduct, and although open to advice and suggestion, and to the presentation of the elements of an ethically perfect life, he will only accept and act upon such presentations as appeal to his own reason."

It is a time of great physical and mental activity, when the reasoning powers come into full play. Life takes on a more serious aspect, and there is a desire to solve its problems. The creative imagination and logical memory now become strong.

Interests.—"The interests at this period are wide and varied, including the physical, intellectual, and moral fields." "Athletic, scientific, literary or aesthetic interests, or plenty of hard work, are a necessity to keep the mental life pure, healthy and growing."

Material for Instruction.—"Servants of the King" (50 cents in cloth, 35 cents in paper), by Robert E. Speer, is a collection of brief, stirring biographies prepared especially for the Senior grade. It deals with heroic lives at home and abroad and is written to inspire to similar consecration. If something briefer is desired for ten minutes' supplemental class work, the Senior grade of "Missionary Studies for the Sunday-school" (20 cents), published by The Sunday School Times Company, of Philadelphia, is recommended.

Adult and Home Departments

In these departments a study of social, moral, and religious conditions in non-Christian lands will strongly appeal. The text-books already issued by the Young People's Missionary Movement on Africa, China, India, Japan, Korea and the Moslem world are invaluable for this purpose, and others are in preparation. They are issued in paper at 35 cents each; in cloth, 50 cents. Titles will be found in Appendix C. There are also other volumes, dealing with home missions, that are equally valuable. "Home Mission Heroes," "Aliens or Americans," "The Challenge of the City," "The Frontier" and "The Negro Problem" are now available.

For a thorough study of these books the substitutional method for a period of eight consecutive weeks is considered by many as satisfactory, or they might be studied at some hour other than the Sunday-school session. Especially in the Home Department may missionary books and literature be circulated with good effect. For a list of suitable books see Appendix C.

E. Hymnal.

Developing Missionary Intercessors

How Missions Help the Prayer Life

It has been said that "if a few men of our generation will enter the holy place of prayer and become henceforth men whose hearts God has touched with the prayer passion, the history of his church will be changed." It is just such men and women of prayer that the Sunday-school should educate and develop. The teaching of missions will help to accomplish this. Historically, one will learn of remarkable answers to prayer, of God's concern for his world; and the present conditions in non-Christian lands will reveal the necessity of earnest definite petitions. No one can read of Dr. Chamberlain's remarkable deliverance at the River Godavery, and of Livingstone's experiences while crossing Africa, of the erection of Dr. Mackenzie's hospital at Tien Tsin through the favor of Li Hung Chang, of the wonderful outpouring of the Spirit at the Lone Star Mission in India, and of Pandita Ramabai's life, without realizing in a new sense the power and effectiveness of prayer. Such remarkable answers show that prayer is vital, and such it should be in every scholar's life. They should be warned against the mere mechanical "saying of prayers," and should learn to talk with God. The Buddhist sets his prayer-wheel revolving in the wind, and with every turn of the wheel he thinks he secures merit for himself. Just as valueless are the vain repetitions so often offered in Christian lands. If our teaching of missions does not produce a more intelligent and spiritual prayer life in the pupils, then we have signally failed in a most important particular.

Prayer Should be Vital

The one essential is that prayer for missions be vital. If it is, then it will be intelligent, definite, daily. The first requisite for praying definitely about any object is to be informed about it. Mission study gives this necessary information, so that one becomes acquainted with conditions in various parts of the world, both at home and abroad. Intelligent prayer is also definite prayer. Instead of asking for blessings in general, which is indefinite, a knowledge of a particular need leads to a definite petition. If word comes that the missionaries in a certain station are in some peculiar danger because of the attitude of enemies, or if in another locality there is a discouraging situation because of prejudice and indifference, or if reports from another field indicate rapid growth and expansion, each of these differing conditions calls for very definite and differing prayer.

Prayer Cycles •

Prayer for missions should also be offered daily. To promote this on the part of all the scholars should be the aim of every school. This can be secured by presenting objects in the form of a Prayer Cycle. The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions publishes a Cycle for the year, a different missionary being suggested for each day, so that in the course of the year every missionary under appointment by the Board, his location in the field, the kind of work he is doing, and how long he has been on the field, are all indicated. A leaflet announcing the Prayer Cycle reads: "Cut off from the prayers of the church, the missionaries feel as would the diver whose air tube was disconnected, for prayer is indeed the missionary's vital breath, his native air. But how can we pray for them if we do not know who they are, where they are, and what they are doing? The wilfully unintelligent prayer can be neither fervent nor effectual. By simply following the Year Book day by day, we can come in touch for a few moments with the special work of each one; whether teaching, or translating, or preaching, or healing the sick."

The Presbyterian Home Board publishes a somewhat similar Cycle for the home field. The Baptist church also publishes a Prayer Cycle, quarterly, throughout the year, and other denominations have similar publications. All of these, however, are prepared for adults rather than for children. Hence, a special Prayer Cycle for use in Sunday-schools has been issued by the Presbyterian Boards of Home and Foreign Missions, as follows:—

A PRAYER CYCLE

FOR THE USE OF SUNDAY-SCHOOL PUPILS

SUNDAY. Pray for the success of all Christian work in your own town. Give thanks for mercies, and ask for a glad heart that shall commend to all with whom you come in contact, the religion you profess.

MONDAY. Pray for our country—a Christian nation. Ask that all Christians may help to make and keep it so, in deed as well as in name.

TUESDAY. Pray for our country—the Homeland. Give thanks for your own home and ask that God will bless all efforts put forth to build up Christian homes throughout our land, among the “exceptional peoples”—the Indians, Alaskans, Mormons, Mexicans, Mountaineers—the Freedmen and the strangers who enter our gates.

WEDNESDAY. Pray for our country—for Christian education. Give thanks for your own opportunities and ask that in our Mission schools and in public schools the spirit of Christ may be taught.

THURSDAY. Pray for our Mission schools in foreign lands. Ask that the boys and girls may learn to know and love our Master, Jesus Christ, and to become His faithful followers.

FRIDAY. Pray for our missionary doctors. Ask that they may relieve and comfort the sick as Jesus did and that they may teach them to know that Jesus is their Friend, and the Lord and Giver of Life.

SATURDAY. Pray for our missionary teachers and preachers. Ask that they may be so like Christ that they shall win the people of every nation to worship the Father in Heaven. Ask that every Christian may help to make Christ known to all the world.

Constant use of this or of some other cycle of prayer should be encouraged and the scholars thus led into a closer, more vital sympathy with the extension of the Kingdom of God in the world.

Prayer Covenants

The use of a Prayer Covenant is therefore suggested, pledging the individual to the ministry of intercession. The American Baptist Missionary Union has issued the following:—

AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION

A PRAYER COVENANT

Recognizing that the supreme need of missions is prayer, I purpose to intercede each day, so far as may be possible, (1) for the peoples of mission lands; (2) for the missionaries and their native co-workers; (3) for those who administer the work at home; (4) for my own and all other churches, that they may give themselves more earnestly to the study and support of missions; and (5) for the young people of our churches, that a larger number may hear the call of God to missionary service.

 Fill out this card and return to Box 41, Boston, Mass.

Another published by another Board reads as follows:—

PRAYER COVENANT

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength," I promise to pray daily for our missionaries who are in the field, for the consecration of many new ones to this great work, for increased interest and larger membership and offerings in my own society, and that many new auxiliaries may be organized this year. Believing that I am personally responsible for a share of this work, I promise to do all in my power to advance the cause of missions wherever and whenever I have opportunity, and to give of my time, talents and money as God has prospered me.

In His name,

Signed

On the reverse side are the following suggestions:—

Pray for the health of our missionaries; ask strength of the body and refreshment of the spirit for those who have been long at the breach. Ask for the young that they may face with courage, and at the same time with prudence, the difficulties of a life absolutely new to them; ask facility in learning the language and in adapting themselves to the climate and the food. Ask especially that Christ may reign over their whole being, for God cannot serve himself mightily for the conversion of souls except with instruments consecrated to him without reserve.

Ask God to prepare native evangelists; ask him that our publications in European or in native languages may advance his kingdom.

Can you not, in some sort, adopt a missionary as your own representative in pagan lands and pray for him and his work as if they were really your own? Cannot you take possession of a country, or a district, or a missionary station, and give yourself no rest until God has shed his spirit upon this best object of your prayers?

Missionary Intercessors

This suggests to the Sunday-school worker the idea of Missionary Intercessors. It has been pointed out in a recent leaflet that there is a difference between missionaries and laborers. Christ prayed that the latter might be sent forth into the harvest. Laborers may be missionary workers on the field or missionary intercessors at home, and while the former are greatly needed, there is as great or even greater need for the latter. Dr. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, relates how one of their stations received constant and marvelous spiritual blessings, so much so as to raise an inquiry in the minds of the missionaries as to the direct cause. Upon his return to England, Dr. Taylor was met one day by a stranger who asked him many questions concerning this particular mission station. The man seemed so intelligent regarding all the needs and conditions of the work that Dr. Taylor was surprised, and upon inquiry learned that this man and the missionary in China had made a covenant to pray for each other daily. The missionary sent on to England explicit reports of the work, and his friend at home gave himself to the ministry of intercession. It would be an excellent thing if every Sunday-school in the land would assume a prayer obligation, as well as a financial one, for some definite work in the home and foreign fields. The scholars would thus be trained as in no other way to become missionary intercessors.

Prayer in the Sunday-school

In addition to what has been said, there should of course be intelligent, definite prayer in the Sunday-school each Sunday, and those appointed to lead in prayer should secure beforehand information to enable them to make their petitions vital. A scanning of the daily papers will often give one a knowledge of the existing conditions at home and abroad, and thus serve as a guide to prayer. The topics for the day presented in the denominational Prayer Cycle should be placed on the blackboard each Sunday, in full view of the school, thus suggesting to the scholars' minds, not merely definiteness in prayer, but fostering an acquaintance with the varied missionary activities of their church and suggesting personal daily use of such a Prayer Cycle.

It is well to make a class for a stated period responsible for presenting definite topics of prayer for each missionary Sunday. These topics may be suggested by the missionary lesson of the day or by some other definite and peculiar need which should be brought to the attention of the school at that particular time. In addition to a topic of prayer for a particular Sunday, it is also well to have a more general topic for the week. This can be announced likewise on the blackboard, the attention of the school being called to it by the superintendent.

Developing Missionary Giving

Giving Money and Self

Cyrus Hamlin, the founder of Robert College in Turkey, declares that his becoming a missionary was due to a contribution-box. When but a small boy, one day he went off to the annual village muster, which was always a great occasion in a New England village. He was given seven pennies by his mother with which to buy his luncheon. As she handed them to him she said, "Perhaps, Cyrus, you will put a cent or two into the contribution-box at Mrs. Farrar's." As he drew near the house he wished that his mother had not said one or two, but he finally decided on two for missions. Then conscience began to work. Two pennies for missions and five for himself? That would not do, so he decided on three for missions. But he was still not satisfied, and when he reached Mrs. Farrar's door he said to himself, "Hang it all! I'll dump them all in and have no more bother about it," and with this he put all seven pennies in the box. It meant that he himself went hungry that day at the muster, but a conquest for the missionary cause had been made; and it was not strange that in later years such a boy should gave his life to missions. It was through missionary giving that his interest was so deeply stimulated that, in due time, he gave the greatest gift possible for any one to give—himself.

Relation of Knowledge, Interest, and Benevolence

There is indeed a very close and logical connection between interest and benevolence. We do not give largely of our means, certainly not our lives, to those objects in which we have little or no interest. There is also a logical connection between intelligence and interest. We are interested only in those things of which we know. Hence the constant need of fresh and definite missionary information if there is to be continued and increasing missionary giving. If the latter would be secured, the former must be provided.

It is a great mistake to magnify the appeal for money, and there will be no need to do so if facts and needs which appeal to the conscience are presented in the spirit of prayer, and people are told that they may have such share in the work as after prayerful consideration they may be led to take. It is impossible to continue to pray earnestly and definitely for any cause without feeling a personal obligation to help answer the prayer by some gift of money or of service.

In the Sunday-school the primary aim of missionary education should not be to secure the children's money, but to give them information that will arouse interest, deepen their spiritual lives, and lead to prayer, benevolence, and activity. However needy a cause may be, the logical order of information, prayer, benevolence, should never be reversed or altered.

Interest Dependent on Investment

If on the one hand, as we have already seen, interest leads to benevolence, then on the other, interest in any object can be rightly measured by the amount of investment we have in it—not always of money, but of time, of thought, of effort, of our very selves. In fact, our interest in anything is in direct proportion to our investment. As far as money is concerned, a man is interested in the success of that business in which he has a share, or owns some stock; he is concerned about the standing of that bank in which he has deposited his savings.

A child's interest, as well as a man's, in the mission cause will depend absolutely upon the amount invested; not of money merely, but of thought, of time, of effort, of self. It is how much of ourselves we put into a game, into study, into business, into anything, that measures our interest and determines whether we shall meet with failure or success.

Necessity for Expression of Interest

It is highly important also, for the very best good of the child himself, that he should be led logically and naturally to express his interest in some direct and tangible way. It is useless, and even harmful to his character, constantly to be giving him information that arouses his interest if no opportunity is given for the expression of the interest. During the Russian-Japanese war, a returned missionary from Japan was addressing a crowd of East Side children in New York City, and showing what good could be done by the sending of comfort bags, picture cards with Scripture verses, etc., to the Japanese soldiers. Instantly at the close of the address, some of the boys crowded around the speaker and said, "Us fellows are goin' to send some pictures to them Jap soldiers." Information aroused interest, and interest, like the gathering steam in a boiler, sought some way of escape and expression.

It is absolutely necessary, therefore, that in our missionary education there should be constant opportunity for the expression of the child's interest. This can be done by gifts of money which may be earned or tithed, or be the result of self-denial; by the making of some object which will be useful for a missionary box; or by the doing of some service or kindness directly to others. In any case, whether the gift is money or personal service, it must be the child's own, a part of himself. Money given which he can earn or save by self-denial will be the expression of his interest far more than any sum given him by parents or others simply to drop into the contribution-box. In one case it is a part of himself, in the other he is simply an agent for another. In the one case he is benefited; his interest deepened, the spirit of generosity has had opportunity for expression; in the other case he has played simply an impersonal part, and has little or no interest in the gift because it was not a part of himself.

Why the Child Should Give

The question with which we are more particularly concerned in this chapter deals with the training of the child to give his money; for it is essential that he give, not merely because of the actual need for the money, but because of his need to give it, for the development of his own character. The sense of stewardship should be early instilled in the child's mind. He very soon asserts the right of ownership of possessions, and is ready at times as a very little child to dispute the touching or taking anything that is his. But he must learn that after all, that which he calls his own, he really holds in trust. Life itself and all that he has, is a gift, and for it he must render an account as a steward. The failure to appreciate and recognize this truth not only causes selfishness and creates misers, but is the explanation of church debts, deficits in mission treasuries, and one of the chief hindrances to the progress of the Kingdom of God in the world. Salvation is perfectly free—purchased, however, at the cost of the life-blood of the Son of God; but the gospel, which is the proclamation of salvation, costs money—always has and always will. This truth must be taught to the young people in our Sunday-schools if the church of the next generation is in any fitting measure to meet her obligation to world-wide evangelization.

Some Erroneous Ideas

There are some erroneous ideas that have gotten abroad among certain people that surely need to be eradicated by the process of education in the Sunday-school.

I. A misconception of the relation of Mission Boards to the local church.—Some persons have the idea that the Mission Boards are organizations apart from the church, organized for the purpose of exploiting a work of their own, for the support of which they look to the churches. An appeal on the part of the Boards for a work in the home or foreign fields is regarded by many churches almost as an impertinence. Such churches regard any appeal for work outside their own four walls as inimical to their church, and a church debt or other pressing obligation is pleaded as an excuse for not participating in work beyond their own borders. The fact is, however, that the Boards are simply the agents appointed by the various denominations to carry on the world-wide work which the church at large recognizes to be hers, and the responsibility for this work does not belong to the Boards apart from the church, but to the church first and foremost; and in this large responsibility every local church of the denomination has its proportionate share.

These truths need to be emphasized and to be made clear in the Sunday-schools. Only thus will a grievous misconception be cleared away, and the young people realize that the various Boards are their agents to carry on their work, and hence that loyal and sufficient support must be given.

2. A second misconception held by a few is that of money contributed to Board treasuries, by far the larger part is used for administration expenses by the Board, and that comparatively little reaches the direct object in the home or foreign field for which the money was given. This of course is absolutely false, as an examination of the accounts of the treasurers of any of the denominational Boards, home or foreign, will show. The fact is that no business concern handling as much money as do the Boards is run as inexpensively. The administration expenses of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, 1906-7, including salaries of secretaries, office assistants, publication and distribution of reports, literature, postage, etc., was less than 7 percent of the receipts. Of the Board of Home Missions of the same church, it was 7.08 percent. In other denominations the percentage was about the same for administration expenses. The Foreign Board of the Methodist Church expended 7.15 percent, of the Baptist Church about 8 percent, of the Congregational Church about 7 percent, and of the Episcopal Church about 6 percent. That is, of every dollar contributed to home or foreign missions in the Presbyterian Church, for example, 93 cents goes directly to the field, and the other 7 cents pays all the expenses connected with securing, forwarding and reporting the gift.

On the other hand, if a single dollar was contributed to foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church, it would cost a good deal more for an individual to send it to the foreign field direct than to send it to the Board for transmission. In the first place, there would be 5 cents postage to any foreign land, and then added to this would be the cost of exchange from American money to that of the country to which it was to go, and added to this would be the cost of the envelope and paper of the accompanying letter. Instead, therefore, of 93 cents reaching the field if sent through the Board as the medium, only about 90 cents of the dollar could possibly reach the missionary, if sent directly to him by an individual.

Superintendents would do a real and valuable service to their schools, therefore, if each year they would consult the reports of the various Boards of their denomination, and discover just what percentage of receipts was required the preceding year for administrative and other expenses, and give the information to the scholars, so that they who give the money may know just where it goes and what it costs to send it.

The Undeveloped Possibilities in Giving

As yet neither the church nor the Sunday-school has commenced to give, either to missions or other benevolences, a tithe of what each is capable of doing. It is estimated that in the hands of evangelical Christians in the United States alone at the present time (1909) there are more than $29,000,000,000, and that their wealth is increasing at the rate of $800,000,000 annually. If this vast amount were conscientiously tithed, there would be $2,900,000,000 in the United States alone turned over into the Lord's treasury, and an annual amount in addition of $80,000,000.

Even of the amount contributed by Christians, the large percentage goes towards the support of local churches, and the small part only is used for Home and Foreign Missions. In view of the need, we may well ask, "Is the church at large really in earnest in her missionary work?" And because of the failure of the church to fully meet the need as yet, the importance of education along the line of systematic giving to missions cannot be over-estimated.

What Might be Done

In the Sunday-schools of North America there are some 15,000,000 enrolled members. If these gave an average of a postage stamp a week to missions, there would be an income from the Sunday-schools alone of $15,600,000. If they gave an average of a carfare a week, the sum would amount to $39,000,000. One of the largest denominations, with a Sunday-school membership of over a million, averaged for Home and Foreign Missions for the year 1908-09 between 10 and 11 cents from each of its Sunday-school scholars. If the Sunday-school members would only begin to give to missions according to ability, it would not be long before the fathers at home would be giving the price of a 10-cent cigar a week to missions, and the mothers a carfare or two.

These figures are given to show how many fold more the gifts to missions might be if they were placed by Christians simply on the basis of the averages mentioned. Evidently for some Christians to give to missions each week the price of a 10-cent cigar, or a plate of ice cream, would not be the thousandth part of what they actually ought to give. The trouble with so many people is that they have the idea that the great work of missions is a 2- or 5-cents-a-week affair, and hence they judge it somewhat contemptuously. They must be led to see that it is a world-wide enterprise, in which millions need to be invested and expended. When the church awakes to this realization, a new era will have dawned.

We are now brought to a consideration of

The Scriptural Method of Giving

The only really universally successful method of giving is that "according to the rule of three," having its basis in the scriptural injunction, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him" (1 Cor. 16:2). According to this rule, giving will be

Individual—Every one of you;

Systematic—On the first day of the week;

Proportionate—As God hath prospered him.

In the Sunday-school this scriptural method of benevolence should be taught and practised.

Individual.—Determined effort should be made to secure an offering from every member of the school. This is not really so difficult as it may seem. In the Third Presbyterian Sunday-school of Newark, N. J., for a period of ten consecutive years every member of the school made an offering every Sunday, without a single omission. The amount of the offering each Sunday was not stated, but the number of scholars present was mentioned, and how many had made an offering. Only the teacher knew what each scholar of his class pledged and gave. When the system was first put in operation the school had some 400 or 500 scholars, and each of them brought an offering with the exception of about twenty. The following Sunday the number of non-contributors was reduced, and so on for several Sundays, until finally every member of the school was contributing. This went on for a month without an omission, then for six months, for a year, two years, five years, ten years. When it is known that this is a school whose membership is not made up wholly of children from well-to-do families, but that some of the children are self-supporting, its record is all the more meritorious and worthy of imitation. When the plan was first introduced, two little newsboys who were members of the school and who had no home, resolved that they would give systematically with the rest, and so they pledged between them one cent a week. The first Sunday one of them brought the penny which represented half a cent from each, and the next Sunday the other boy gave the penny. But it was not long before each of them was giving a penny a week and more, because of awakened interest and an aroused sense of responsibility.

Systematic.—It is not enough, however, to secure a gift from every one occasionally, but, as in this Newark school, the giving should be systematic. This is opposed to spasmodic giving based on a passing emotion. The only right method of benevolence is based not on fancy, caprice, feeling, but on principle. This calls for the setting aside at stated times certain definite amounts for the Lord's work. System enters into our whole lives. We eat systematically, sleep systematically, work systematically; why should we not give systematically? Some excuse themselves from pledging any definite amount systematically because of the uncertainty of their income. But any pledge so made is revocable when necessary, and any one can be very sure that God does not expect him to do more than ability permits. Pledges for other obligations are made, for rent, fuel, food, etc., and by careful calculation most of us can estimate what can be likewise pledged for benevolence.

Proportionate.—"The rule of three" requires that giving should also be proportionate. Some people give systematically, but not proportionately. In the Primary class, years ago, they learned the song "Hear the pennies dropping," and they never drop anything else. If they would but drop their penny-giving, instead of their pennies, and advance from systematic to proportionate giving, it would be a great gain. Some people years ago adopted the 2-cents-a-week plan for foreign missions, and with advancing years and increased incomes they are still giving systematically 2 cents a week, and no more. For a child to give 2 cents a week to missions may be both systematic and fittingly proportionate, but for a man with a salary of $25 or $50 or more a week to give but 2 cents a week is exceedingly disproportionate. Proportionate giving for the Jew meant more than one-tenth of his income. Some hold that a tenth was for the Levites (Num. 18: 21, 24), a second tenth for the Feasts (Deut. 14: 22-24), and every third year another tenth for the poor (Deut. 14: 28, 29). Nay, for him it was not giving, it was simply paying what was recognized as his debt, and giving began after the debt was paid. Some Christians equal the Jew in the payment of the tithe, some set aside less, some give in addition to the tithe. Let no man judge another in this matter, but let every one be persuaded in his own mind, and "as God hath prospered him" let him give, "not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver."

These, in substance, are the principles of giving that must be taught in the Sunday-schools if in any adequate measure the Kingdom of God is to be advanced. They are the principles, too, on which the development of Christian character rests. The child who is taught the idea of stewardship, and who systematically lays aside for benevolent purposes a definite proportionate sum of all that he receives, will, as a man, always have on hand a benevolent fund upon which he can draw in response to appeals that constantly come to him, and thus he will experience the real joy of giving and realize, as is possible by no other method, the sense of his stewardship.

Should Children Make Financial Pledges ?

The question has been raised as to the advisability, or even possibility, of securing pledges from children, on the ground that many of them have no control over definite sums of money. While this may be true in some cases, there are very few children who do not have control over some money in the course of a year. For those who have regular allowances it is an easy matter to pledge a definite sum. Those who do not, can often earn money in various ways, by running errands, by performing duties about the home, by cleaning off snow in the winter, by working in the store half of Saturdays, by securing subscriptions for magazines, by doing patch work or darning, by doing small printing jobs on a boy's printing-press, etc. In some of these ways money is secured, and being earned the girl or boy will have all the more pleasure in giving it. In any case before any pledge is made the scholars should be counseled to advise with their parents as to what pledge they should make.

Methods of Collecting Gifts

As there is need for method in the laying aside systematically a definite proportionate amount for benevolence, so there is a need for method in the collecting of gifts.

Mite-boxes and Coin Cards.—There are the numerous kinds of mite-boxes and coin cards of varied shapes and designs which always appeal to the younger scholars. They are made in the form of churches, pyramids, trunks, dress-suit cases, drums, eggs, crosses, and in many other designs to represent the particular cause for which the money is to go. They are furnished by the literature departments of the denominational Missionary Boards.

Weekly Envelopes.—For older scholars, weekly envelopes dated for each Sunday in the year are used by some schools in connection with definite pledges. They are a great aid in inculcating the habit of systematic giving. In using them, care should be exercised to have it distinctly understood by each scholar to what object the money is to be devoted. This can be made clear by using different colored envelopes for different offerings, and printing briefly on the outside of the envelope the designated object.

Shares of Stock.—In the Union Street Presbyterian Church, of Oakland, California, there originated the idea of the Missionary Substitute Company. Shares in the company were sold at 5 cents a month, and stockholders were given certificates of stock and had the privilege of voting at the stockholders' meetings when the disbursement of the funds was under consideration. Shares were sold both in the Sunday-school and the church, and the plan worked admirably, increasing the gifts for home and foreign missions many fold, and enabling the church to support several missionaries. This plan has been successfully used in many churches of the West. Holding shares of stock trains the Sunday-school scholar to regard missions as an enterprise in which he should increasingly invest.

Other Attractive Devices

The Dollar Bond—issued by the American Baptist Missionary Union is somewhat similar to the plan of the Missionary Substitute Company, but is denominational purely. The bond reads as follows:—

ONE DOLLAR BOND. A share in the Stock of the American Baptist Missionary Union and the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Societies. A Company doing the King's Business in Japan, China, the Philippines, Burma, Assam, South India, Africa, and Europe. References: Luke 2:10; Matthew 28:19, 20; Acts 1:8; 2 Corinthians 5:19, 20; Romans 10:14. Securities: The promises of God. Dividends: An hundredfold in this present time and life everlasting. Capital Stock: The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof.

WHAT THE DOLLAR WILL DO.

Dime No. 1 will help to send out twenty-three new missionaries this year.

Dime No. 2 will send our missionary ship on its errand of peace among the islands of Japan.

Dime No. 3 will go to the rescue of helpless little children from slavery, sin and death.

Dime No. 4 will supply a brick or tile for a new chapel or mission house.

Dime No. 5 will assist toward a scholarship for a boy or girl in a Christian school.

Dime No. 6 will provide support of a native teacher, preacher, or Bible woman.

Dime No. 7 will brighten the Homes for the Children of Missionaries in this land.

Dime No. 8 will aid in our medical work, and preach to the soul as it heals the body.

Dime No. 9 will be applied to the salary of a missionary.

Dime No. 10 will collect and carry the other nine to the uttermost parts of the earth.

THE WHOLE DOLLAR will be given to our Lord to prove that we love him and desire to obey his last command.

Will you take a dollar share? If not, can you take a dime?

$25 will provide a share in a Mission Station from which you may hear twice a year.

$50 will do that and make your pastor or superintendent an honorary life member of the Missionary Union. Send for Prospectus.

The front cover of the bond is attractively printed in green and red, and on the last page there are ten divisions, one for each dime. Every person who collects or gives $1 on the bond receives from the Missionary Union an illustrated booklet showing the various phases of missionary work to which the money goes.

The Sudan Relief Expedition, published by the United Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., is arranged to give full information in most attractive form of the work carried on by the United Presbyterian Church in the Sudan. A small booklet, entitled "The Sudan Relief Blue Book," and containing several chapters, is provided for the instruction of the scholars. Accompanying the Blue Book is a large map of Africa to be given each school. The Sudan is marked off in black squares, each square to represent different sums from 25 cents up to $5. The squares when covered with seals read "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

World Conquest, also published by the United Presbyterian Board, describes the work of its three mission stations in Egypt, the Sudan, and India. To each class is furnished a map, upon which there are steamships and locomotives outlined in red leading from the United States to the three mission fields. Each steamship or locomotive, which represents the value of 25 cents, is colored black by the class as each quarter is received. The total possible collection for the map is $5, and as one is filled others can be secured. The advantages of this scheme are that the location of the various mission stations of the United Presbyterian Church are indelibly fixed on the scholars' minds, as they see the map repeatedly, and the steamships and locomotives make a very visible connection between the home land and the mission fields.

The same idea can be used by any Missionary Committee, making use of steamers and locomotives, or links of a chain to bind the home land with any points in the home or foreign fields supported by the particular denomination. Bookcases drawn on cardboard, in which some twenty books were differently arranged, were used by a school in New York to collect money for home missions. Each book's value was reckoned as 25 cents, $5 being thus collected on each case; and as each quarter was received in the class, one of the books was colored black. The books were meant to represent Bibles needed in home mission work.

A Mile of Pennies was secured by a church in Pennsylvania to pay off its debt. By exact calculation it was found that there are 84,480 pennies in a mile, placed side by side, or sixteen to a foot. As the debt was just $844.80, it was decided to ask every one in the church to secure as many feet of pennies as possible. All responded eagerly and in a short time the money was raised. A mile of pennies would provide the support of a missionary for a year in certain fields, with something to spare, and the plan is suggested as a possible one for many schools who with little effort might have their own missionary on the field.

Class Treasurers.—It is a good plan in the older grades, surely in the Intermediate and above, for each class to appoint its own treasurer, who will be responsible for the collecting of the money each week, turning it over to the school's treasurer, and making weekly or monthly reports to the class of the number regularly contributing and of the total amounts.

Definite and Graded Objects

It is of the greatest importance that every scholar should clearly understand what is the object for which his gifts are asked. Instead of stating that the offering will be for the Board of Home or Foreign Missions, care should be taken to explain carefully just what these Boards represent, the number of missionaries and workers, the character of their work, the peculiar and special needs, with some telling illustrations. Unless the work that the Boards are doing, as the agents of the church, is thus clearly explained, the scholars regard them as impersonal organizations in which they have no particular concern.

Care should be used also in presenting such objects as will appeal to the natural interests of the child in the various stages of his growth. For instance, a Primary class in a New York church supports a crib in the Day Nursery of an East Side Mission, and contributes to a Verandah School in India. The children are thus giving to other little children, in whom they are naturally interested. Other departments of the same school, besides other gifts, contribute to the support of a seaside homewhere the children of the tenements may go for a ten-days' outing. The scholars were asked one summer, while away on their vacations, to put in their vacation contribution envelopes their customary weekly gift when at home, and this money gives vacations to other poorer children at the sea-shore.

It has already been pointed out that gifts depend logically on interest, hence the necessity of presenting to children appropriate and definite objects for their benevolence. The Primary child will naturally have far more interest in helping support a Verandah School or a crib in a Day Nursery, than in giving simply to home, foreign or city missions. In the one case, the object is definite and on the plane of his natural interest; in the other, it is absolutely indefinite and meaningless. If deemed advisable, a model or picture of a Verandah School and a doll's cradle or crib might be kept in the Primary room and shown to the children, explaining clearly the objects for which their money goes, thus making it more realistic.

The girls and boys in the Intermediate grade of another Sunday-school, after studying the life of Paton became so stirred by his heroic spirit that of their own accord they formed a New Hebrides Missionary Company, and sold shares at 10 cents each, forwarding the money to Dr. Paton for his missionary work.

Definite Objects versus Special Objects

While all giving should thus be definite and along the plane of the natural interest, the various denominational Boards are discouraging what has been known as special object giving. This meant devoting gifts, for example, to the support of a particular child or native worker or Bible woman. In the practical working out of this plan, however, great difficulty was experienced, for the particular individual thus supported might die, in some way prove unworthy, or be incapacitated for service. The children, too, had the custom of growing up to be men and women, and so getting beyond the plane of the Primary child's interest. Almost endless labor was imposed upon Board treasurers and secretaries and missionaries on the field in an attempt to keep the particular school, church, or mission band at home in touch with the special object of their interest and benevolence abroad. Anything detrimental occurring would tend to make the givers at home lose interest and refuse further support. For these reasons, the Station Plan or Parish Abroad idea is being urged by the Boards. Each church, Sunday-school, class or individual is asked to take just as large a share as is desired in the work of a mission station or parish. In most cases a particular station or parish can be assigned, and regular reports of the work thus supported are sent to all who contribute towards it. Instead of having one's missionary effort centered solely on some particular child, native worker, or Bible reader, and staking one's whole missionary interest on the success or failure of this individual, the other plan gives a broader vision of the work, a larger interest in its comprehensiveness, and develops the spirit of missionary giving on the only right principle. The gift is thus localized, but not personalized; interest is developed in the work which is permanent rather than in a worker who is necessarily temporary.

Special Giving

Such special occasions as Easter, Children's Day, Rally Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas afford a splendid opportunity to bring before the Sunday-school some special need of one of the Missionary Boards. For such seasons, most of the denominations publish special programs and furnish envelopes, coin cards or mite-boxes for contributions. They can usually be obtained free in any quantity desired by those schools promising an offering to the Board that furnishes them.

Reports of Gifts Made

Where the money goes must be reported at stated times to the schools if missionary giving is to be developed. When this was not adequately done in a certain Primary Department, some of the children had the idea that the teacher used the money for herself. Mr. Marion Lawrance tells this story. One Primary scholar said to another, "Do you know that our Sunday-school teacher chews gum?" The other said, "Well, she can afford to when we give her all our pennies." It would not be strange if, under such circumstances, some or all of certain children's money for the Sunday-school offering should be spent for candy or chewing-gum for themselves on the way to Sunday-school. The sure way to prevent this happening is to arouse a controlling interest in the object for which the Sunday-school money goes, not only by telling of the need for the money in the first place, but by giving graphic reports of what has been accomplished with that already contributed. The surest way to secure additional dollars for missions is to tell of the good accomplished by those already given.

It is of interest to show the growth of benevolence by making comparative reports with the preceding month or with the corresponding month of the past year. An earnest effort should always be made to have a record of how many members of the school are contributing each Sunday, and this should be reported, as well as the amount of the gifts.

Attention should never be called to any particular class, all of whose members are not contributing. But the mere mention from the desk that the whole school is contributing, with the possible exception of half a dozen or a dozen members, will soon awaken in these non-contributors a desire to become regular contributors too. It is of far greater importance to announce that every member of the school has made an offering for any particular Sunday or number of Sundays than it is to state the amount collected. There is no reason, however, why both should not be reported.

Securing Missionary Recruits

Giving is not a substitute for going to the mission field, provided one ought to go. We have often been told if we do not go, then we must give; and of course we should. But many persons try to still their consciences and drown the voice that calls to missionary service, by giving their money when God demands their lives. "There is no monetary equivalent for a life," and if a man or woman has ever faced the duty of becoming a missionary and has tried to escape it by substituting a gift, that gift is not an equivalent. Jesus did not say, give to send others, but go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature. That command is still in force, and if you as a consistent Christian are not a missionary to-day, then it must be because duty and the voice of God call you to another line of service.

Not everyone is called to be a missionary. Those who are, are a privileged class. Special talents and traits are needed, and those who do not possess them can serve God better elsewhere than in the mission field. "G. P. C.," seen in a dream, was interpreted by an ignorant but well-meaning man to mean "Go preach Christ," but a wiser friend suggested it meant "Go plough corn." If he ploughed corn to the glory of God, he would find opportunities for witnessing for Christ in the cornfield, and be more useful than if he should attempt to do that for which he was neither fitted nor called.

The Missionary Call

While on the one hand, we should hold before the Sunday-school scholars the idea that giving is no substitute for going, provided God has given the call to missionary service, yet, on the other hand, only those should offer their lives for missionary service who have received a distinct call of God. What constitutes a call cannot be entered upon here, but let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind. The requirements of missionary service are such to-day that only the best equipped spiritually, intellectually, and physically are being sent out. The old idea that those unfit for service at home were good enough to send abroad is not the principle upon which recruits for missionary service are selected by the church.

The Natural Recruiting Agency

It is in the Sunday-school, of all places, that recruits should be sought for missionary service, for the girls and boys are then at the most impressionable period of life, when life choices are made and when the heroic and ideal appeal with peculiar force and power. James Chalmers was fifteen when he decided to become a missionary, and in response, too, to a letter read in Sunday-school by the superintendent, as has already been pointed out. Eliza Agnew was eight, John Ludwig Krapf fourteen. John Coleridge Patteson was fourteen when his attention was first called to missionary service by Bishop Selwyn. Alexander Duff's first interest in missions dated back to the time when he was only four, and Fidelia Fiske's to the age of three.

Avoid Wrong Stimuli

No attempt should of course be made so to work upon children's feelings that they will offer themselves for missionary service without due thought; but broad foundations of intelligent instruction should be laid, portraying conditions and needs at home and abroad, the fewness of the laborers, and the opportunity for service. When this is wisely done there need be no fear of the results. With the mind instructed and the feelings stirred, the will will make a proper choice under the direction of the Spirit of God.

There is no reason why the Missionary Committee should not aim to secure recruits for missionary service. In fact, this should be their very definite aim. Among the possible life choices, the privilege of missionary service should certainly be presented. For a boy to become his country's ambassador in a foreign land or to hold a high position in the government at home would be recognized by the world as a high political honor. To be the ambassador of Christ is a greater honor, however, and to have a share with Christ in the world's betterment and redemption is the highest ideal for a life choice that can be brought before any girl or boy.

Reflex Influences

The school that has in it one or more missionary volunteers will have its spiritual life deepened, its sympathies broadened, and its interest quickened in world-wide evangelization to a very marked degree. When the day comes for the young missionaries to go to their fields of labor, there will be in that school from which they go a more vital interest in missions than ever before. Every member of that school will feel his share of responsibility for sustaining, by prayer and benevolence and correspondence, his own missionaries.

There is not a school in the land that cannot, by believing prayer, pray into being missionaries from its own membership, and that should be the constant prayer of pastor, officers and teachers. If this is a real burden on their hearts, and if the joy and privilege of missionary service is held before the scholars constantly, there will be responses to the call.

Systematic graded instruction, definite daily prayer, proportionate, systematic giving, securing missionary recruits—these should be our aims as missionary workers in the Sunday-school. Anything less comprehensive will fail to meet the existing need.

Questions

1. Explain the phrase "no monetary equivalent for a life."
2. What are the requirements for missionary service?
3. Why should recruits be sought in the Sunday-school?
4. What will be the effect upon the spiritual life of a school in which such recruits are sought?
5. How is it possible for any Sunday-school to send out one or more missionaries?

How to Secure and Operate the Missionary Library

It is said to-day that in many places the Sunday-school library is no longer serving any useful purpose, and that the books are not read. The increased number of books and magazines in the home, and the multiplication of public libraries, seem to have made unnecessary Sunday-school libraries. While this may be true in some measure, yet experience has proved that there is a large place for an up-to-date missionary library. It fills a real need, and if it is properly stocked and circulated there will be marked advance in the missionary interest of any school. In one church in New York, where there were three young people's societies, by some energetic work on the part of the Missionary Committee, 438 persons read one book that had been recommended.

How Books Have Influenced Missionary Decisions

When we remember that such missionaries as Judson, Livingstone, Scudder, Martyn and Marsten were all led to the mission field through the reading of missionary literature, we can see the possibilities of good missionary books. Buchanan's "Star of the East," depicting the needs of India, fell into the hands of Judson and led him to consecrate his life to work abroad. Gutzlaff's "Appeal on Behalf of China" decided David Livingstone for the foreign field. Gordon Hall's "The Plea of Six Hundred Millions," picked up from a table while waiting to see a patient, led Dr. John Scudder to India. "The Life of Brainerd" so inspired Henry Martyn and Samuel Marsten that the former went to India and the latter to New Zealand.

Instruction Should Create Desire for Missionary Literature

There must be missionary intelligence if there is to be missionary interest, benevolence and effort. While the inspiring missionary address is invaluable, yet missionary literature will reach a far larger audience, and in the end secure greater results. Likewise the class and platform missionary exercises in the Sunday-school must be supplemented by the reading of instructive and interesting missionary books if the scholars are to become thoroughly missionary in spirit. In fact, much of the instruction in the school should be aimed to create a desire for missionary books.

What Books to Get

There are three things that concern that member of the Missionary Committee who has charge of the missionary library: what books to get, how to get them, how to get them read.

There should be eight general classes of missionary books in every well-stocked library.

1. Books of Methods, for Missionary Committees and workers, such as:—

"Missions in the Sunday-school," by Miss Hixson. 35 cents in paper, 50 cents in cloth.

"Holding the Ropes," by Miss Brain. $1.00.

"Fuel for Missionary Fires," and "Fifty Missionary Programs," by Miss Brain. 35 cents each.

"Leaders in Conference," by Miss Crowell. 30 cents.

2. Books of Reference, such as:—

"The Encyclopedia of Missions," by Dwight.

"The Blue Book of Foreign Missions," edited by Dwight.

"Christian Missions and Social Progress," by Dennis.

These are valuable for reference in the preparation of papers and for any general information that may be desired.

3. Historical Books, treating the growth of the missionary idea from earliest times.

"Two Thousand Years of Missions Before Carey," by Barnes.

"A Hundred Years of Missions," by Leonard.

"Histories of Denominational Missions."

4. Books of Travel, Adventure and Discovery, such as:—

"How I Found Livingstone" and "In Darkest Africa," by Stanley.

"In the Forbidden Land" (Thibet), by Landor.

"In Tropical Africa," by Drummond.

"How Marcus Whitman Saved Oregon," by Nixon.

"My Dogs in the Northland," by Young.

"Voyages," by Captain Cook.

It was the last-named book that aroused William Carey's interest in missions and led to his becoming a missionary.

5. Descriptive Books, which tell of the people and customs of foreign lands, or describe missionary work:

"Korean Sketches," by Gale.

"Mosaics from India," by Denning.

"In the Tiger Jungle," by Chamberlain.

"In the Cobra's Den," by Chamberlain.

"Chinese Characteristics," by Smith.

"The Minute Man on the Frontier," by Puddefoot.

"The Story of Metlakahtla," by Welcome.

6. Biographies. These are the most fascinating for general distribution, and should be chosen with care. They are also exceedingly numerous. They can be secured in single volumes or in collective biographies. Among the latter are:—

"Heroes of the Cross in America," by Shelton.

"Men of Might in India Missions," by Holcombe.

"The Romance of Missionary Heroism," by John C. Lambert.

"Pioneers and Founders," by C. M. Yonge.

"Eminent Missionary Women," by Mrs. J. T. Gracey.

"Empire Builders," published by Church Missionary Society, London.

Every one should read the lives of Livingstone, Brainerd, Judson, Duff, Paton, Whitman, Verbeck, Mackenzie, Gilmour, Chalmers, Robertson, Evans.

7. Books of Missionary Fiction and Romance. Among these may be mentioned:—

"The Bishop's Conversion," by Maxwell.

"A Chinese Quaker," by Eyster.

"The Sign of the Cross in Madagascar," by Fletcher.

"Two Heroes of Cathay," by Miner.

"Black Rock" and "The Sky Pilot," by Connor.

8. Selected Libraries. The cheapest way to secure missionary books is to get the selected libraries, from eight to ten volumes each, including many of the above classes, published by The Student Volunteer Movement and by The Young People's Missionary Movement. Lists of those now published will be found in Appendix C.

It should of course be borne in mind in selecting the books for the library that they should be chosen with reference to the needs of the various grades in the school, making ample provision for Primary, Junior, Intermediate, and Senior scholars. The Juvenile Library, of ten volumes ($5), is heartily recommended for the younger grades. In Appendix C will be found a well-selected list of books for all grades.

How to Get the Books

The problem with some is not so much what books to get as how to get any at all, because of the meagreness of the Sunday-school treasury. Various methods may be employed to secure the necessary funds. They may be solicited personally by the Missionary Committee, or perhaps the books may more easily be secured by asking each member of the congregation who is able to do it to contribute a special one that is desired for the library. In some schools a book social is held, each person attending bringing a new missionary book of his own selection or the price of one. It is well to have posted beforehand a list of the books desired. More than one copy of a popular book is desirable.

Inasmuch as so many more volumes can be secured in selected libraries for the same cost, some prefer to get people to give the retail price of the book that is in a selected library rather than to purchase the volume singly. With the combined contributions the school can then procure two selected libraries for the cost of the individual books in one. As the selected libraries have uniform bindings, others prefer to pay the additional cost for the single volumes in order that the original binding may be secured and the book's individuality be preserved.

How to Get the Books Read

Having secured the books, the next thing is to get them read. Some suggest no mention of the fact that certain books in the library are missionary, for the reason that some scholars have an erroneous idea that such literature is necessarily dull and uninteresting. The best way to get a book read is to have some capable person, who can tell a story well, relate in about three minutes to the school a striking scene or incident from the book. Care should be taken not to tell all of the incident, but only to the point of greatest interest, and then stop when curiosity as to the outcome is at its height, stating that if any one wants to know how it turns out, the whole story can be found in such and such a chapter of such and such a book, from which the incident is taken. This usually leads to a call for the book by several scholars at the close of the school.

As an example of the above suggestion, the following might be told to a Sunday-school:—

Every girl and boy here has seen a snake. Many of the boys have killed them. Over in India they are much more numerous than here, and sometimes they come into the houses. One day Dr. Chamberlain, an American who was living in India, was lying on his back on a cot in a native house reading. All of a sudden he heard a strange noise above his head, and looking up he saw an immense serpent twined around a rafter and swinging down within an arm's length of his head. In a moment he was on his feet, and rushing out of the house he grasped an iron pointed bar which he quickly stuck in the serpent's body. Unfortunately he struck him so far down that much of the upper part of the snake's body was free and ready for serious business. It was a critical situation. To release hold of the iron rod and secure a club would mean letting the snake free and that would give the reptile a distinct advantage. On the other hand, without some weapon to strike the snake's head as it thrashed about him, Dr. Chamberlain was powerless to defend himself. Every minute the situation was getting more desperate. He held on as long as he could—

The result of the encounter is told in Chapter III, of "In the Tiger Jungle," by Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, entitled "An Encounter with a Ten-foot Serpent."

The story of "the sinking of the well," and how it resulted in breaking the backbone of heathenism in the island of Aniwa, and "the sermon of Sechele," the converted chief, both recorded in "The Life of John G. Paton," are likewise good material with which to whet the appetite. In Rev. E. R. Young's "My Dogs in the Northland" is some splendid material for story telling.

Recommending a Selected Passage

Another good plan is to ask a girl or boy to read an especially selected passage, say, from pages 70 to 75, of a book which is intensely interesting, just giving a bit of an idea of what the suggested pages contain. The result will be that if you have recommended the right sort of book, the scholar will read not merely pages 70 to 75, but the whole book, and in the Sunday-school class the next Sunday enthusiastically recommend it to all the rest. You have been wise enough, however, not to ask for the reading of the entire book, which the scholar might not have consented to do; but the few pages you recommended were sufficient to create a desire to read it all. For example, go to some bright boy and say, "John, I thought you might be interested in reading how one feels when about to be chewed by a lion. You will find the account in this book, 'The Life of Livingstone,' on pages ——." Another good plan is to paste a sheet of paper in the back of a good book headed "Opinions," and get every person who reads it to give in a word or two his estimate of the volume, signing his name.

Displaying the Books

Some schools have a good collection of books, but they are in some remote spot, are seldom referred to, and never read. This can be remedied. They should at once be brought to light, placed in a book-case or on a table in a prominent place in the Sunday-school room where they may be readily seen. If covers are upon them, they should be removed, so that the bindings may be visible. Reference to the books from the desk in the manner above suggested will create a demand.

The Bible School of the Bedford Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., has succeeded in making the library one of the most useful and popular features of the school. For a number of months the books had been lying idle on the shelves. Then a new librarian was appointed who possessed ideas, missionary enthusiasm and grit. A report of what she did follows:

"Realizing the number and variety of interests with which we must compete in order to win the boys and girls, and knowing that nothing but the law of attraction would gain and hold readers, we aimed from the first to make the library popular. Taking a suggestion from the book reading contests and the posters so much used in school life, we hunted for ideas for sketches in college annuals and gave the pictures suitable titles so that they would appeal to the ages represented by the different departments. The accompanying cuts show some of the sketches used to attract attention and arouse interest. The answer to each question asked was to be handed in as an essay based on the books recommended. Those who wrote successful essays were to be suitably rewarded. The posters, together with the various books and awards for each department, were given a prominent place near the platform in the main Sunday-school room and were announced for several Sundays.

"About twenty-five persons took part. We asked the teachers of the adult department for volunteer judges from among the older students and six or seven more readers were secured, although the final decision as to awards was made by selected teachers. The awards were given and the honor that was due to the successful contestants was dwelt upon on the the scholars can go away believing that they really have something to look forward to, and many are the satisfied smiles which warm our hearts.

"In addition, we ask the opinions of the scholars when they return the books. If a boy pronounces a book 'bully' or 'slick,' we are quite safe in repeating this recommendation, and are more apt to be successful if we use the same picturesque phraseology. On the other hand, if he does not like the book, we try to find out his reasons. We sometimes repeat them to a different type of scholar, but not usually in his exact words, as they are apt to be too picturesque.

"The library is open three-quarters of an hour before the session of Sunday-school begins, and some of the scholars discovered that it was a good place to visit. This habit was encouraged, because those who were not members of the library and did not take the books home gave us an opportunity for missionary conversation. Next year we shall fall heir to the hand-work made by the classes that were studying missions this year. This will form the nucleus of a missionary curio cabinet, upon which to base many an informal discussion to stimulate interest, and make an opening wedge for further missionary education.

"We hope also to have the library open at least one afternoon a week and one evening, equipping one corner as a reading room.

"Our best patrons come from the Junior and Intermediate Departments, for only about four readers could be secured from the Senior Department. Something had to be done, and again with the idea of working along the line of their own activities, and by the law of attraction, we called in a Senior boy who had taken part in the former contest, and asked him confidentially what sort of a scheme he thought would be successful in getting Seniors interested in the library. He thought about it for a week and reported the following Sunday an idea which we liked well enough to adopt. It was as follows: Awards were to be given to every member of any class where each one had read three books in the following two months and had handed in the answers to five questions placed in the back of the books. The idea was that those not otherwise interested would be brought into line through class spirit. Forty Senior readers were thus secured.

"There seems to be no limit to the variety of ways in which the library can be useful. I hope that some day it will be called 'The Book Store' and thus give it more excuse for widening its circle of activities. During the summer we prepared sample books of pictures and maps to assist the teachers in illustrating and explaining their lessons, and missionary subjects received their share, the small outline maps proving especially valuable. These were ordered from the librarians by the teachers and we secured them in quantities. In this way many more teachers were led to use illustrative material than if they had been obliged to take the trouble to send for maps and pictures to the publishers.

"Another opportunity of stimulating the teachers' interest in the library and making it popular with the whole school was at our annual teachers' meeting, where we succeeded in making the library an oasis in a desert of reports. More posters were made, and the report was given as an 'illustrated talk,' each picture representing some phase of our work. The first poster showed a number of books flying from the shelves out the door, to illustrate our removing the old books of second-class fiction, etc. Another pictured one book on the shelf with two children before it, showing the proportion of our best books to the members wishing to use the library. Here we made an appeal for more books, wherever possible, as gifts from individuals. We found the teachers very much interested and more anxious to send their scholars to the library for books after this annual meeting.

"We have a vision of a great 'trust'—a 'combination' of library, reading room, base of supplies and bureau of missionary information, and to this end we work with great delight."

Questions

1. Mention several instances showing the influence of books in leading to a decision to become a missionary?
2. Why should the Sunday-school aim to arouse an interest in missionary books?
3. What kinds of missionary books do you consider most essential with which to start a missionary library?
4. Mention several ways in which the books may be secured.
5. What is the best method to employ in order to get the books read?

The Bulletin-Board and its Uses

The bulletin-board is one of the most useful adjuncts of the Missionary Committee. It can be made very inexpensively of some cheap wood and stained to correspond with the woodwork of the room where it is to be placed. In size it should be about two feet square, or larger if desired. It should be hung in some prominent place in the Sunday-school room, preferably at the entrance, where it will attract general attention, and give ample opportunity for all to examine it as they go in or out. If the Sunday-school room adjoins the church, so that persons passing in to the services of the latter will see the board, so much the better. The attention of the school may be called to any special item that is upon the board by the superintendent or by that member of the Missionary Committee who has charge of the board. This can be done when the general announcements of the day are given out.

The material that will find its way to the bulletin-board is almost endless. Notice of the most recent missionary books that have been added to the library, the page or pages of a certain book containing a story of peculiar interest, attention to articles in the current magazines that have a missionary value, should all be posted. The daily press should be scanned for the latest most important news that has any bearing upon the progress of the Kingdom of God. The cable has made it possible for us to know within a few hours what is going on in China, India, Africa, Japan, or South America. If there is a famine in China, a race riot or a temperance victory in America, make mention of it on the bulletin-board, taking the clipping from the daily paper with the paper's name and date. Paste upon a large sheet of paper and use some striking headline. For example:

Eating Clay in China
U. S. Transport Anxiously Awaited
A Bazaar in Shanghai

were the captions of items used in this way. On May 4, 1907, there appeared in the New York Globe a picture of the Maharaja of Takari in his Renault automobile. The picture was cut out of the paper, and underneath was printed in large letters:

The Automobile is in India
So is the Missionary
Which Was First?

In the spring of 1907 there was an advertisement in the New York papers of trips to the Orient by a certain steamship company. It was headed:—

Cherry Blossoms in Beautiful Japan

It was placed on the bulletin-board with this question over it;

Could the Following Advertisement Have paper Fifty Years Ago ?

Then underneath the advertisement appeared :

If Not, Why Not ?

SEE THE FOLLOWING BOOKS IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL LIBRARY :

"SUNRISE IN THE SUNRISE KINGDOM," CHAPTER IV.

"THE GIST OF JAPAN," CHAPTERS IX, X.

"JAPAN AND ITS REGENERATION," CHAPTER VI.

Another item, referring to the shipment of steel rails into China, might not have struck the ordinary reader as anything remarkable, but a missionary worker saw its significance from the missionary standpoint, and used it in this way :

Steel Rails Going into China

Did Robert Morrison Find Any there One Hundred Years Ago ?

When ex-President Roosevelt started on his trip to Africa, one of the New York papers published the next day a cartoon showing the supposed newspaper office of "The Uganda News" in the heart of the jungle, and on its bulletin-board this announcement to the "Jungle Folk" : "New York, March 23rd, He's Started." Every sort of jungle animal is represented as running off in terror, after reading the dispatch. This cartoon was cut out, placed on a missionary bulletin-board, and underneath it these words:

Yes, He's Started
But Mackay Was Ahead of Roosevelt
A strange letter in a Frenchman's boot started him
Told in "Uganda's White Man of Work"
Ask the S. S. Librarian for it

A graphic way of presenting the money question is the following, again utilizing a clipping from the daily press, and then asking a question which required some investigation on the part of the scholar:

Who Can Answer?

Find out this week how much Protestant Christians in America gave for missions last year. Hand answer to the superintendent next Sunday.

Copies of attractive leaflets may also be placed on the board, with a statement that they may be secured by asking the superintendent. Here are the titles of some good ones:

What Business Has a Business Man With Foreign Missions?

How Billy Fish Became a Fisher.

A Yankee Boy's Questions.

A cartoon from a New York paper in the summer of 1907 represented Uncle Sam standing on the edge of the United States, with his pockets bulging with banknotes. Opposite him on the shores of China stood a Chinaman offering a bag of money, $47,000,000, and marked "Boxer Indemnity." Uncle Sam benevolently waves it away by a gesture, saying, "Keep it, I don't need it." When this cartoon was placed on the bulletin-board, over it appeared these words:

How Will this Help American Missionaries in China?

Striking sayings of great missionaries may also be put on the board, one or two each week, the name of the missionary who uttered it being given, or suggestion made that in a book in the library will be found an account of the circumstances which called it forth. For example, the following:

When Did He Say It?

"I PLACE NO VALUE ON ANYTHING I HAVE OR MAY POSSESS, EXCEPT IN ITS RELATION TO THE KINGDOM OF JESUS CHRIST."

See "The Weaver Boy Who Became a Missionary."

Note to Scholars:—Record the incident in your notebooks when writing up this week's lesson.

The caption, "Who Said It?" may head a list of sayings that appear on the board for a month, the children being urged to discover who was the author.

Latest items from the mission field reported by the missionary magazines or sent out by the denominational Boards in bulletin form should also be largely used. The Missionary Review of the World, The Intercollegian, and The Record of Christian Work are a mine of information along this line.

Twofold Purpose of Bulletin Board

It will be seen that the bulletin-board will thus be found to be invaluable in promoting missionary information. Its purpose is twofold; first, to give information in a striking way that will be easily remembered, making an indelible impression; and, second, to arouse the spirit of investigation, to whet the appetite, and to be the finger mark pointing to the fields of interesting missionary intelligence.

The bulletin-board may be used during the entire school year, and not merely when missions are a special subject of study for a short term. While some member of the Missionary Committee should have in charge the posting of the items, the whole school should be asked to make contributions, and thus be trained in their reading of the daily papers and secular as well as religious press to gather items that are of missionary interest and value. The collection of material might be delegated to several of the older classes in turn and honorable mention be given by a vote of the whole school to that class that had the most attractive and valuable collection of material for any one month.

Questions

1. What is the practical value of a bulletin-board?
2. What sort of information may be posted upon it?
3. How may the board be best used to arouse the interest of the scholars?
4. Should they bring items to be posted upon it?
5. Should the board be used only on Missionary Sunday or more frequently?

Suggested Material for Charts, Diagrams, Etc.

It has been stated that what is seen by the eye makes a deeper and more lasting impression than what is heard simply through the ear. Charts containing striking sayings by missionaries or others, showing comparative religious and social conditions in Christian and non-Christian lands, comparative expenditures of money for missions and for other things, as well as maps hung on the wall in the schoolroom will be examined by every one, and are extremely valuable as a means of missionary education.

No more graphic presentation of the comparative need of Christian workers in the home land and in India could be shown than the two pictures, one of them containing a thousand persons photographed in the streets of London at the time of the Jubilee of Queen Victoria, and representing the average parish of Protestant Christendom, and the other some fifteen feet long and showing approximately 155,000 people in India, the average parish of every ordained missionary in that land. So dense is the crowd that every inch of the picture shows about a thousand persons. These two pictures can be stretched on the walls of the Sunday-school room with telling effect. They are published in connection with a booklet entitled, "New Year's Eve, 1900, An Indian Dream," by Lucy E. Guinness, and can be obtained from the Foreign Missions Library, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, for 50 cents.

The Young People's Missionary Movement, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, has published a series of six charts or diagrams, showing the comparative number of Christians and non-Christians in the world, the comparative number of ministers at home and abroad, the growth of Christianity during the past century, the comparative religious beliefs in Africa, how Christians spend their money, and that there is power enough, money enough, and men enough to evangelize the world in this generation. The set of six charts can be obtained from any of the denominational Boards. Prices range from $1.25 to $2 a set, according to the mounting. They are reproduced in Appendix D.

Missionary maps of the world showing areas and comparative religions, as well as one's own denominational mission stations, can be obtained from the various denominational Boards. One of these maps should always be in full view of the school on missionary Sunday. Whatever missionary or country is being studied, attention should be called to the situation by means of a pointer, and gradually the message of the map will find its way into the minds and hearts of the school, showing the world's need, and familiarizing each scholar with the work and mission stations of his own denomination.

Miss Brain, in her admirable book, "Holding the Ropes," has classified a number of striking sentences of famous missionaries and others, and as many of them are suitable for charts, among the following some have been taken from her book:

Missionary Mottoes Used by the Laymen's Missionary Movement

Not how much money will I give to God, but how much of God's money will I keep for myself.

The resources of God are promised to those who undertake the program of God.

Christ is either Lord of all, or He is not Lord at all.

Let us advance upon our knees.

Prayer and pains through faith in Jesus Christ can accomplish anything.

The genius of Christianity is obedience to Christ, partial surrender means partial life.

Life is most worth living to him whose work is most worth while.

God's plan depends upon Man.

The whole business of the whole church is to preach the Gospel to the whole world.

System, not spasm, is God's method. We need religion in business, business in religion.

Love never asks how much must I do, but how much can I do?

A man may give without loving, but he cannot love without giving.

Send us anywhere, provided it be forward.

Ye that are men now serve Him.

Consecration to God means service to Man.

They conquer who believe they can.

No one ever becomes great except by identification with some great cause.

We cannot serve God and Mammon, but we can serve God with Mammon.

The goal of history is the redemption of the world.

Churches like armies grow by conquest. When conquest ceases, mutiny begins.

The more religion we export, the more we possess. Love grows by exercise.

We can do it if we will. We can do it and we will.

CHARTS.

In addition to quotations from famous men and missionaries for use as mottoes on the blackboard or on muslin, larger charts and diagrams can be made which will be striking in their effect. For such use the following are suggested:

A Divided Church

Is it well to say, "Charity begins at home" about the time an offering for foreign missions is to be taken?

Is it spiritual and Christian economy to argue that until the local work is well established it is folly to ask the church to give for missions, especially for foreign missions?

In 1832 the Baptists of Indiana separated on mission and anti-mission lines, each division numbering about 3,000.

In 1882, fifty years later, the anti-mission Baptists still numbered about 3,000, while the missionary Baptists had increased to 37,000.

In 1836, the Miami Baptist Association of Ohio divided on mission and anti-mission lines. Nineteen churches with 742 members excluded six churches with 441 members, for having the missionary spirit.

In 1888, fifty-two years later, the nineteen anti-mission churches had decreased to five (one has since died), the 742 members had decreased to 151, and not one of these churches had as many members as in 1836. But the six missionary churches had increased to 65, and the 441 members had increased to 7,212.

In 1840, the Baptists of North Carolina separated on mission and anti-mission lines, the missionary Baptists numbering about 24,000 and the anti-mission, 12,000. Fifty years later, in 1890, the anti-mission Baptists of the state were still about 12,000, but the missionary Baptists had increased to 300,000.

Facts speak louder than words. "There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

A Divided Church on the Subject of Missions

A Century of Progress in Foreign Missions

1807

One hundred Protestant missionaries.

The Bible translated into sixty-six languages.

No Medical Missions.

Very few native Christians.

Four-fifths of the world closed to the Gospel.

Practically nothing given for Foreign Missions.

Christian world did not believe the Gospel would save heathen.

Churches opposed to Missions.

Missions not recognized in colleges.

Practically no helpers.

Eighteen thousand Protestant missionaries.

The Bible translated into nearly 465 languages.

Eight hundred medical missionaries, 1,000 hospitals and 3,000,000 patients annually.

A native church with over 2,000,000 members.

The whole world open to the Gospel.

$21,800,000 given by the Protestants of the world last year.

Demonstrated that the Gospel will save to the uttermost the most degraded.

Now deeply interested.

Thousands of volunteers now on the field—thousands preparing to go.

Seventy thousand native preachers, evangelists, teachers, and helpers.

Did You Ever Hear it Said :

"I do not believe in foreign missions."

"They are too far away."

"There is so much to be done at home."

If that had been the belief of the early church, Christianity would never have gotten beyond Palestine, and we to-day would be heathen.

Our Church Policy

I. It is the mission of The Whole Church to give the gospel to The Whole World.

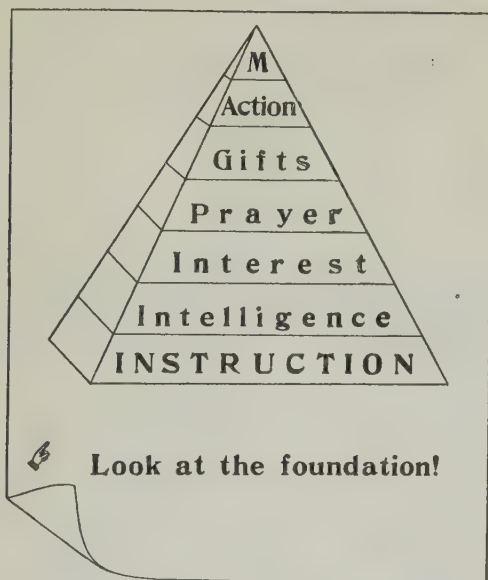

II. This entire Church being A Missionary Society, each member of The Body is under covenant to help to fulfil the will of The Head: to give the gospel to every creature.

III. Every Christian is commanded to "Go" if not in person, then potentially, having a share by gift and prayer in supporting A Parish Abroad, as well as The Parish at Home.

IV. Our Giving should be an Act of Worship (Prov. 3:9); Cheerful (2 Cor. 9:7), and according to the Rule of Three (1 Cor. 16:2).

Individually	"Let every one of you Lay by him in store on the
Systematically	First day of the week
Proportionately	As God hath prospered him."

Attention may also be drawn to the need of missionary instruction by the use of a pyramid, as below:

(Note.—The M stands for “Missionaries.”)

Some Questions

CAN YOU ANSWER THEM?

How shall the Christless believe in Him of whom they have not heard?

How shall they hear without a preacher?

How shall they preach except they be sent?

How many will be sent if every Christian would do, proportionately to his income, as much for missions as I am now doing?

Another useful chart, answering the questionings of some, ought to hang in view of the school each Sunday missions is studied:

DID YOU SUPPOSE the field of Home Missions is growing smaller? Study the map and read of the tremendous movements of population.

INVESTIGATORS declare that there is scarcely a community in Europe, the life of whose common people has not been tinged, if not revolutionized, by American influences infused by those who have returned after sojourn in America, or effected through touch with relatives who have immigrated and remained in America. We are conducting the missionary enterprise on a larger scale these days.

DO YOU realize that we have sent out from us during the past few months hundreds of thousands of missionaries in the persons of the emigrating immigrants? Yes, that is what they are, missionaries gone on a propaganda; gone out from us to tell what they have seen and heard and felt. Can there be a more important missionary question than this, "What have they seen and heard and felt?"

THERE are between sixteen and twenty thousand Protestant Christians in Cuba and Porto Rico. Ten years ago there were practically none.

If You Were Sick

Would you like drums beaten to drive the evil spirit away?
They do it in Africa.

Would you like some innocent person to be accused of bewitching you? They do it in Africa.

Would you like red hot pins stuck in your flesh to let out the pain? They do it in China.

Would you like paper cats strung in front of your house? They do it in Korea.

Would you like a mixture of scorpions, toads, centipedes and wasps? They take it in China.

Would you like broth made from the living flesh of your own child? They make it in China.

Truly the dark places of the earth are habitations of cruelty.
Would you like to tell those afflicted a better way?

It is often prescribed in China:

	Scorpions	4 parts.
	Wasps and their nests	1 part.
	Toads	20 parts.

Grind thoroughly, mix with honey and make into pills.
Two to be taken four times daily.

The cost of a plate of ice cream, the Income would be	100,000,000 " "

We now give 7 mills, or the equivalent of 3 minutes a week of the most unskilled labor, to Foreign Missions.

What Missionaries Have Done

Missionaries have translated the Bible into about seven-tenths of the world's speech.

It is to missionary efforts that all South Sea literature is due; there is not a single case on record of the reduction to writing of a Polynesian language by another than a Christian worker.

During the nineteenth century missionaries reduced to writing for the first time 219 spoken languages, for the purpose of Bible translating. Bishop Patteson alone gave a written form to twenty-three Melanesian languages, and made grammars in thirteen of these.

Missionaries have done more than any one class to bring peace among savage tribes.

Missionaries were the first to give any information about the far interior of Africa. They have given the world more accurate geographical knowledge of that land than all other classes combined.

All the museums of the world have been enriched by the examples of the plants, animals, and products of distant countries collected by missionaries.

"Perhaps the most useful drug is quinine, and the world owes it to the Jesuit missionaries of South America."—Dr. Keene.

The missionaries have extended the world's commerce. The trade with the Fiji Islands in one year is more than the entire amount spent in fifty years in christianizing them. A great English statesman estimated that when a missionary had been twenty years on the field he was worth in his indirect expansion of trade and commerce ten thousand pounds per year to British commerce.

The export trade of the United States to Asiatic countries jumped from about $58,000,000 in 1903 to about $127,000,000 in 1905, which was due chiefly to missionary influence.

Think It Over

Of every two infants in the world one first sees the light in heathen Asia: To what instruction is it born?

Of every two brides one offers her vows there: To what affection is she destined?

Of every two families one spreads its table there: What love unites their circle?

Of every two widows one is lamenting there: What consolation will soothe her?

Of every two orphan girls one is wandering there: What charities will protect her?

Of every two wounded consciences one is trembling there: What balm, what physician, does it know?

Of every two that die one is departing there: What is his hope for the future?

Why ?

Why should we give money to save heathen abroad, when there are so many heathen at home?

There are some other WHYS equally logical.

Why should I give money to save those in other parts of this country when there are needy ones in my own state?

Why should I give for those in other parts of the state when there are needy in my own town?

Why should I give to the poor of the town when my own church needs money?

Why should I give money to the church when my own family wishes to have it?

Why should I give to my family what I might spend on myself?

Why?—Because I am a Christian, not a heathen.

Any of the chart material or quotations that have been given can be written on the blackboard, or put in permanent form by printing or stenciling on muslin. A complete outfit of large rubber letters mounted on wood can be obtained at printers' supply houses for about $4, also from Millard & Co., 12 East Sixteenth Street, New York. Muslin can be purchased for a few cents a yard. The help of some of the older boys can be secured in the making of the charts under the direction of a member of the Missionary Committee. Various combinations of three or four quotations can be put on a single chart, under the headings given above, or such as "Heroic Words of Great Missionaries," "Who Said It?" giving the quotations and arousing the spirit of investigation on the scholar's part. Sections of maps for use on a particular Sunday can be drawn on the blackboard during the week by some of the members of the school. The Missionary Committee should seek to enlist the co-operation of just as many members of the school as possible, in all the various lines of work that need to be done.

Additional charts will be found in Appendix D.

Questions

1. Why are charts valuable for use in the Sunday-school?
2. What ones would you use if you desired to appeal to persons indifferent about missions? To persons who give nothing to missions?
3. Suggest a selection of quotations and chart material for use in a school knowing nothing whatever about missions.
4. How can the co-operation of the scholars be secured in the making of charts?

A Missionary Sunday Demonstrated

Let us imagine ourselves visitors on "Missionary Sunday" to a Sunday-school organized for missionary work. As we enter, we notice that the secretary at the door marks the attendance of all scholars, thus relieving the individual teacher of the necessity of taking time for this during the Sunday-school session. Near the door, in a conspicuous place, is a bulletin-board, and our attention is attracted by the following headline:

Whose Motto?

Expect great things from God: Attempt great things for God

On the wall back of the platform is a large missionary map of the world. On either side of it hangs a chart. One reads as follows:

The other chart contains the following:

Museum.—In one corner of the room stands the missionary museum. In it we find quite an array of curios, all labeled; fetiches from Africa, a prayer-wheel from Burma, an idol from India, an ancestral tablet from Japan, a pair of women's shoes from China, some samples of sewing and of carpentry work from industrial schools in India and North Carolina, toward whose support the Sunday-school contributes. There is part of a totem pole from Alaska and a miniature dog sled, a model of the kind used by the missionaries among the Eskimos. These are a few of the things that have been gathered by the school during a period of four or five years.

Pictures.—Hanging on the walls we notice the pictures of the home and foreign missionaries whom the school helps support. There are also pictures of the mission compound abroad and of various features of the home and foreign work.

The Library.—We are invited to inspect the missionary library, and on the shelves we find quite an array of books classified according to the age of the scholars, and also according to countries. There are most interesting books of missionary fiction, and we are told by the librarian that all new books are noted on the bulletin-board, and that from each, on different Sundays, an interesting incident is told in three to five minutes to the school to cause a demand for them.

As we enter the Sunday-school room once more we notice on the blackboard this information:

Missionary Topic for To-day

WILLIAM CAREY, 1761-1834

First Missionary of the First Missionary Society in England Cobbler, Educator, Translator

"The Wycliff of the East"

Translated the Bible wholly or in part into 34 languages and dialects

Opening Exercises, Hymn and Prayer.—Promptly at the hour for opening the superintendent announces the first hymn, "When Morning Gilds the Skies." At its conclusion he said, "In that hymn of praise I am sure we wish all the girls and boys of India might join, but many of them have never heard of Christ. Will Mr. Brown lead us in a brief prayer, not exceeding one minute, that the missionaries to-day in India may gather some new scholars into their Sunday-schools, remembering to pray especially for Dr. J. C. R. Ewing, of Lahore, our own missionary, and for those mentioned in our Year Book of Prayer for to-day. Their names are on the blackboard. Then will Mr. Black follow in a one-minute prayer for Mr. Long, our worker among the Highlanders in North Carolina, and also for the other home missionaries mentioned in the Prayer Calendar for to-day. Their names are also on the blackboard."

At the conclusion of the prayers, the superintendent said:

"Now we are going to sing a missionary hymn from memory, one that was written by a missionary to India, Bishop Heber's 'From Greenland's Icy Mountains,'"

Map Drill.—After the singing of the hymn, the chairman of the Missionary Committee came forward and called attention to the map. His first question was:

"If we wanted to start for Calcutta where Carey landed in 1793, in what direction would we travel?" "Could we go by any other route?" "Which would be shorter?" How long did it take Carey to go from England?" "That was in 1793. Now let us see, where did Carey begin his work?" "At Mudnabatty. Then Serampore." "We shall mark these as the first mission stations with gilt stars, and get one of Miss White's Junior boys to put them on for us. You will see one star has 1793 on it and the other 1800. They indicate the beginnings of Protestant missions in India. Next Missionary Sunday, as we continue our missionary study on India, we shall see how Christianity spread from these centers through other missionaries to other parts of the empire."

Scripture.—The Scripture lesson was then announced, every scholar who had brought his own Bible being asked to hold it up. Psalm 119:97-105 was read responsively, the superintendent saying:

“We are going to read to-day a passage which shows how valuable the Word of God is. Did you ever think what it would be to be without a Bible? The people of India never had one until Carey translated it for them?”

Notices and Reports.—Then came the notices for the day and the treasurer’s report. He stated that more than nine-tenths of the membership were now regularly enrolled as proportionate and systematic givers, and that he hoped every member of the school would be so enrolled before long. The report of the preceding Sunday was then posted, as follows, attention being called to the total number of “givers” and “omitters,” and the comparison with last year:—

Department.	Givers.	Omitters.	Amount.
Officers	12		$1.25
Home Department	37	14	2.59
Seniors	127	9	6.43
Intermediates	75	6	3.15

Primary	72	2	1.76
Beginners	34	3	.83
Total	450	37	$18.28
Corresponding Sunday last year..	364	93	16.25

There was an announcement of a stereopticon lecture on India for Thursday night, parents as well as scholars being invited, and some moving pictures of present-day scenes in India were promised. It was then stated that the supplemental work for the day, which was a missionary lesson on Carey, would be taken up in the classes for fifteen minutes.

We were sitting near an Intermediate class and the following treatment of the missionary lesson was given by the teacher. Each scholar had had a text-book from which to prepare the lesson during the week. The one used in this particular school was "Missionary Studies for the Sunday-school, Third Series," published by The Sunday School Times Company.

The Missionary Lesson in the Class.

"Our aim to-day in our missionary lesson," said the teacher, "is to see the value of literary work in missionary service."

"Suppose you were a missionary in India, John, what is the first thing you would need to do?"

"Get a place to live."

"Yes, and that would be with some of the other missionaries at first. Did Carey find any missionaries in India to whom he might go?"

"No, he was the first."

"After you had gotten settled in your new home, in order to talk with the people, what would you need to do?"

"Learn the language."

"Now, let us see, what did Carey do when he first landed in India? What difficulties did he have to meet? Did they discourage him? Had he conquered any difficulties before reaching India?"

The facts of his poverty, his struggles to support his family, and the opposition to his missionary ideas were all brought out in the discussion.

"But how did God provide for him, both in England and in India?" "Was the time spent in Mudnabatty lost?" "Why not?" "Was there anything providential in the fact that the Hindus were so hard to reach, and that Carey could not do very much itinerating during his first seven years in India?" It was brought out that though he could not preach to many, he resolved to give the natives the Bible in their own tongue. "What aptitude did Carey have for language study?"

"What two events of great importance occurred in the year 1800?"

"The baptism of the first convert and the translation of the New Testament in Bengalee." "Which was the more important?"

This question led to a good deal of difference of opinion, and it was brought out that Christian literature may often reach those whom the missionary or native convert cannot. The necessity of the Bible for Christian growth was also emphasized, so that at the close of the lesson every boy of the class realized the supreme value of translating the Bible and other Christian literature into heathen tongues.

Each boy was given a picture of Carey to put in his note-book and was asked to copy down the material that was on the blackboard, and then during the week to note the reforms that Carey introduced into India. Each was also to state what he considered was the greatest thing that Carey did for India, and why he thought so.

The Bible Lesson in the Class.—Promptly at the close of the fifteen-minute period, a chord was sounded on the piano and the classes began at once the Bible lesson of the day. Five minutes before the end of the thirty-minute period, another chord was struck, giving warning of the approaching end of the lesson. Then when the time had elapsed, the superintendent stepped forward and called upon the school for a moment of silent prayer, asking each one to pray that the lesson just studied and all the exercises of the day might make a deep spiritual impression. The pastor concluded with a brief audible prayer along the lines suggested by the superintendent.

Closing Exercises.—With a great deal of spirit the school then sang, "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," attention being called to the fact that this hymn also was written by Bishop Heber of India.

"Before we take up the review of to-day," said the superintendent, "we are going to have two or three of the most recent items from the work in India told us by as many boys." These were the items given, not read:

In the Wanamaker girls' school at Allahabad (pointing out the place on the map), the teachers and pupils are greatly interested in The National Missionary Society. They meet every Sunday morning to pray for it and have given 107 rupees to the Society. It was organized in December, 1905, and we are particularly interested to know that the delegates met on Christmas day in the very room that William Carey used as his library in Serampore.

A missionary from the Etawah district, where there are 800,000 people, writes that the past week he baptized more than 100 people, and that he believes 100,000 could be won to Christianity in a few years if there were enough workers.

In this same Etawah district people are suffering just now from famine. They need food, shelter, and medicine. Six cents a day will keep a family from starvation.

"Now, girls and boys," said the superintendent, "how many of you expect to go home to dinner to-day?" Every hand was raised. "Suppose when you got there your mother should say, 'I'm very sorry, Mary (or John), but there is no dinner ready.' When supper time would come around she would say again, 'I'm sorry, but there isn't any supper.' By that time you would begin to feel pretty hungry. Well, thousands in India never eat but one meal a day, and in this time of famine many do not get even that. All here who would like to join us in denying ourselves something this week and bring the money for the 'special famine fund' for India next Sunday are asked to do so. Perhaps if you speak to mother and father about it, the whole family might agree to give up butter or desserts this week. Talk it over when you get home."

Review of the Missionary Lesson.—One of the teachers then gave a review of the missionary lesson:

"If you will look at the blackboard a moment, girls and boys, you will notice the name of one of the most famous men in modern missions. Sometimes he is called the 'Father of Modern Missions.' Can you guess why? Yes, because he was the one who started the movement, and was the means of the formation of the first Foreign Missionary Society in England and became its first missionary.

"It is always hard in a few words to tell the story of a life, but the three on the board tell Carey's life. You have already filled in the details in your class work. You know the story,—how he rose from the cobbler's bench to the professor's chair. He did so because he followed out what he chose as the motto of his life. Who can give it? Yes, 'Expect great things from God, attempt great things for God.'

"Now, there is just one scene in his life, and something that he then said, that I want to dwell on in the moment that remains. After the missionary society had been formed, the next question was, Who shall be the missionary and where shall he go? A surgeon in the employ of the East India Company had just returned to England and was invited to address the Society. He did so, and as he talked, every one realized what an opportunity there was for mission work. 'There is a gold-mine in India,' said one, 'but it seems almost as deep as the center of the earth. Who will venture to explore it?' 'I will go down,' said Carey, 'but remember that you must hold the ropes.'

"Now, girls and boys, do you think he asked anything that wasn't fair or square?" (Exclamations of "No.") "I have brought with me to-day a rope, I didn't have a gold-mine; and I want all the girls and boys here in front to get their hands on this rope." (Hands out the rope.) "Now, suppose there was a deep hole right down in the bottom of this floor, 25 feet deep, and one of the little Primary children had fallen in, would you want to leave him there? No, every boy here would volunteer to go down and get him out. Suppose we selected William Brown to do it. There are two things William would want to know about the rope with which we would let him down. Can you tell what they are? First, that it was long enough, and second, that it was strong enough. If the rope were only 10 feet long, would it do? No. Why not? Too short.

"Yes, and there are some missionary ropes which are too short. Some don't go beyond the vestibule of their own Sunday-school room; some don't get beyond the local village, town or city. But a missionary rope to be of any use has got to be long enough to reach every place of need.

"But what else must the rope be? Strong enough. Would William be willing to have us let him down with a piece of O. N. T. cotton or a string? I guess not. He wants to be sure the rope is strong. What makes a rope strong? The strands. The greater the number of strands, the stronger the rope.

"Now, the boy who has hold of the end of that rope, will he tell me how many strands he can see? Three, yes.

"There must be at least three strands to every missionary rope. Can you guess what they are? Prayer. Yes, that is surely one of them. What the missionaries want and ask for is a great deal of prayer, the kind that has a lot of heart and earnestness in it. I have a friend now in China, and before he went he told me that what he feared most was not the difficulties he would meet in China, but the indifference of the church at home. He was afraid that those of us here would let go of the missionary rope.

"Can you name another strand? Gifts. Yes. If we are honest in praying, we must be prompt in paying. There is not much use in praying, unless we help answer the prayer by giving. We ought to give that which costs us something, that which means some hard work and some self-denial, or else we shall not know the real joy of giving.

"And now, can anybody guess a third strand? Let me help you. Have any of you ever been far away from home and from mother and from father for a few days? Yes, I see some have. Well, what man is it that you look for very eagerly about breakfast time, dressed in gray and with a leather bag over his shoulder? The letter man. Yes, and you are hoping there is a letter for you. Suppose you were six or eight or ten thousand miles away from home, and a missionary among people who didn't speak your language, and whose customs and habits were all different from yours. Do you think you would be glad to get a letter from home? Yes, I am sure you would.

How eagerly you would wait for the arrival of the mail and how glad to find some letters from the dear home land.

"Well, girls and boys, you can help make some missionary glad by writing a letter this week, not an old man's letter or an old lady's letter, but a boy's letter, a girl's letter, telling him that you know something about what a missionary does, what he stands for, and that you believe in the work, and that your hands are on the missionary rope.

"These three strands together, girls and boys, prayer, giving, correspondence, make a pretty good missionary rope. The missionaries are mightily concerned if our hands have hold of it. Are they asking anything that isn't fair or square? Where are your hands?"

A brief prayer, asking that every girl and boy in the school might realize their personal obligation to missionary service while here at home, and that Carey's heroic example might be an incentive to each, concluded the exercises of the day. To all who wished to have them, souvenirs were distributed at the door. They represented gold nuggets, being gilded, and on them were noted some facts of Carey's life, as follows:

India is a gold-mine, but who will venture to explore it? I will go down, but remember you must hold the ropes.

1761—William Carey—1834. "Expect great things from God; attempt great things for God."

Missionary Plans in Actual Operation

In an increasing number of Sunday-schools throughout the country both Home and Foreign Missions are being systematically presented. In the statements of plans that follow, a large variety of methods is seen to be in operation. Definite educational, financial and spiritual results are being secured. Such benefits need not be confined to these schools alone, but are within the reach of all. There are doubtless difficulties to be overcome in every school before missionary teaching can be made a complete success. Lack of interest, brevity of the Sunday-school session, imperfect equipment, lack of properly qualified teachers, are some of the problems that have been faced and met by the workers who give their testimonies in the following pages. This chapter will prove a mine of suggestions to the wide-awake Sunday-school worker eager for help. Classification of the schools has been made as follows:—

I.

The School in the Large City.

II.

The School in the Smaller City or Town.

III.

The School in the Suburbs or Country.

I. THE SCHOOL IN THE LARGE CITY.

BEDFORD PRESBYTERIAN BIBLE SCHOOL
BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Special Features : Excellent graded work—Systematic Instruction in classes and from platform—Interpretative, illustrative, and supplemental methods of instruction all employed—Unique method to promote reading of missionary books.

The Bedford Bible School of Brooklyn is a graded school, and the missionary instruction is adapted to the various grades. It begins in the Beginners' department. There the little ones are interested in other children, and are taught such lessons as God's love to all, helpfulness, and love to all.

In the Primary department one Sunday a month is observed as Missionary Sunday—prayers, Bible verses, songs and gifts are definitely related to the children outside the Church Circle—at home and abroad. Every Sunday a child recites a little story on missionary facts selected by one of the teachers. Love money (given from the children's own possessions), and birthday pennies are given to missions, and many little devices are used to add interest. Sometimes paper money is used to paste over a large picture of an idol, missionary boxes are given out, and on Missionary Sunday every child (120 or more) receives a little picture cut from current magazines. Certain lessons of the year are treated especially as missionary lessons.

In the Junior department similar methods are used, but adapted to older pupils. The Intermediate, Senior and Adult departments observe the last Sunday of each month as Missionary Sunday. Songs, Scripture, and a ten-minute talk relate to missions, and the service is made as bright and interesting as possible. Missionaries, when available, stereopticon views, maps, etc., make these days memorable, and the whole offering the following Sunday is devoted to the object presented that day. The school supports itself by individual pledges, and an envelope for the first Sunday of each month is marked for missions, so that even if a pupil is absent the offering goes for this purpose.

The Missionary Committee also stirs up interest in missionary books. Awards are given for the best answers to questions based on the books suggested for reading. In the Junior department Miss Crowell's "Junior" books are given out and the scholars are asked in which country they would rather live and why. In the Intermediate department the question may be: "What missionary do you think was bravest and best?"—based on Lambert's "Romance of Missionary Heroism." The Seniors, likewise, are asked: "If you had $10,000 to invest for missions where would you think it best to give it?" The literature for this is found in Trull's text-books, or in those of the Young People's Missionary Movement. Papers 200 to 500 words in length are asked for and awards are given in pictures, flags, curios or books.

The programs furnished by the Presbyterian Boards of Home and Foreign Missions are also used on appropriate Sundays, and the pupils are urged to take these and other leaflet literature home with them.

But the most important instruction is that given by the individual teachers. In the meetings for lesson study, missionary truths and incidents are suggested and the Teachers' Library Committee furnish references from the library. In this way the fundamental principles of Christianity and the present-day progress of the church are vitally linked with the Bible lesson of the day, the regular course of study is not interrupted and interest in the world-wide campaigns of the church does not depend on spasmodic effort or appeal, but on systematic instruction by teachers and from the platform. Certain lessons are uniformly taught in their missionary aspect, but in regular course; for example, The Flood; Abram's Call; The Fall of Jericho; Gideon's Victory; The Lepers at the Siege of Samaria; Feeding the Five Thousand; The Great Commission; The Sending Out of Barnabas and Paul; The Macedonian Vision, etc.

Regular Bible study courses are pursued for about nine months in the year in this school, and it is now proposed to use the summer sessions for mission study with missionary text-books, missionary curios, and photographs to illustrate these lessons. A missionary cabinet will add much to the interest.

It is the fundamental principle of the Bedford Bible School that the Bible is to have first place; other books are merely supplementary. The importance of consecutive courses of study is emphasized so that special days are not as a rule allowed to interfere. We have found it the best plan to give missions, temperance, Sabbath keeping and other special topics the place given them in the Bible, no more and no less. Properly taught missions are unsurpassed for interest and inspiration, and make a balanced, not an unbalanced Christian.

Superintendent.

SCHOOL

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Special Feature : Support of specific work at home and abroad doubled offerings.

On Missionary Sunday, the fourth Sunday in the month, a missionary address is given, usually, and special information, missionaries often addressing us. The Young People's Missionary Movement's enlarged pictures and stories are used. We have a missionary library. The church and school support a missionary in Korea, from whom we get concrete information. We as a school are supporting altogether seven girls and one Bible woman in foreign fields—three of these supported by our organized Bible classes. Several girls in home mission institutions are also cared for.

A mission study class from the Sunday-school meets weekly. Our supplemental and manual work, which runs through all grades up to and through our Intermediate, has not yet taken on specific missionary lines, but probably will soon. Our Missionary Committee is pushing the work hard and places in all departments the week before Missionary

Sunday, in bold type, the placard, "Next Sunday is Missionary Day" and on the Sunday, "To-day is Missionary Day." In this way everybody is prepared for the special collection, whereas formerly teachers and scholars would often forget it. Our collections have doubled easily, for missionary purposes, since we took up the support of a missionary and have worked persistently at the diffusion of missionary spirit and information.

FIFTH AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL
NEW YORK CITY.

Special Features: Small school—Efficient committee—Missionary teacher-training—Manual work—Use of maps, charts, curios, etc.
—Use of text-books.

Our Sunday-school meets at 9.30 A. M., continuing for one hour and a quarter. We allow fifteen minutes for opening exercises, fifteen for supplemental work, thirty minutes for International lesson and fifteen minutes for closing exercises.

The supplemental work is graded study of the Bible as a book, its contents, its geography, a brief historical outline, and a course on redemption, and on ten consecutive Sundays missionary study. This supplemental study is taught in classes by the regular teachers, and when we are having the missionary supplemental work, the desk review is often on the subject of such work. Occasionally special speakers are secured, but many of the teachers belong to mission-study classes and we can generally secure from among them a speaker. Teachers who have not had the advantage of a regular mission-study class, have at least the help of a preview of the month's missionary lessons at the monthly teachers'-meeting.

The work done by the scholars at home is encouraging. The quality of this work depends however, largely upon the attitude of the teacher towards supplemental work. If the teacher treats it as secondary as well as supplemental, the scholar is quick to "follow in his train"; on the other hand, an enthusiastic teacher means almost without exception, an enthusiastic scholar. The older pupils keep missionary note-books, for questions and answers and items of interest; the younger boys and girls, picture note-books, and into these from week to week they paste the typewritten questions on the lesson prepared by each individual teacher two weeks in advance. The walls are hung with charts seldom enough to make the scholars eager to read them, and either a missionary map of the world or a map of the particular country that they are studying is kept before them on "Missionary Sundays." The library is made use of, one of the teachers telling occasionally a story or two from some books which can be secured after the school session. Such story-telling always brings eager applicants to the desk, and the books from which the stories have been told are usually in demand for six weeks after the "advertising."

All the offerings of the school are given for benevolent causes. In short, our study has created knowledge, aroused interest, quickened sympathy into helpful activity, and in some cases led to life consecration to the cause of Missions. I dare not say that the mission study in the school has been solely responsible for these results, but it has helped, and our boys and girls take a broader view of the "regions beyond," and a more truly patriotic interest in their home land because of their study of Home and Foreign missions.

Our courses of study are planned by a Missionary Committee of five members. Each year they have prepared the material, which has either been typewritten for the scholars' use or published in book form. The latter are now issued by The Sunday School Times Co., and may be secured from them. The committee prepares the special missionary programs for each Missionary Sunday, adds necessary books to the library, and plans for special offerings (Christmas, Easter, etc.).

The committee has the help of the pastor's warm approval, and the superintendent's sympathetic co-operation, while almost all of the teachers are not only willing, but eager, to do what the committee asks of them.

RUTH G. WINANT,
Chairman Missionary Committee.

THIRD ENGLISH EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL
BALTIMORE, MD.

Special Features: The Sunday-school Missionary Society the pioneer missionary organization in the church—Systematic education producing in a difficult location large financial and spiritual results.

Our Sunday-school Missionary Society with us antedated the C. E., the Woman's Missionary Society and all other benevolent work except the Ladies' Aid Society. We have been organized nearly thirty years. The last Sunday of each month all the year around is Missionary Sunday. We appoint a committee each month to arrange a program for the next. The committee may be three or five persons or a class. They select the hymns, get a speaker, or furnish whatever is given. We endeavor to make the service bright, attractive and instructive. Whenever any of our missionaries are in town, we always secure them. All the secretaries of the Boards have frequently visited us, and often we have men from other denominations who tell us what they are doing. We read articles to the school from our publications, and by all means endeavor to keep the scholars informed as to the scope and needs of the work. This has been highly educational and beneficial in every way. When we began, there was opposition, but we finally overcame that, and now Missionary Sunday is looked for as a matter of course.

What has been the result? When we began, we were the pioneers; now we have a Woman's Missionary Society, the leading one in our Synod; we have a Young Ladies' Mission Band; a large C. E. Society and a Junior C. E.

Society. When we began, the total benevolence of our church was $50. Last year the total was $2,400. Our Sunday-school raised about $700, giving $250 to Home missions and $250 to Foreign missions. We have a total of 761 on our Sunday-school roll—officers, teachers and scholars.

We are a congregation and school of working people. Our neighborhood has deteriorated, and we are surrounded by Jews and Negroes. The majority of our people come a considerable distance to church and school. The largest contributors to church support only pay $1 per week, and we only have four or five that do that well. So far as ability is concerned, we were far more able to give $2,500 per year when we only gave $50 for benevolence. The difference is, that formerly we had the ability but not the will; now we have willing givers who give to the best of their ability. For the thirty-five years of our existence, prior to having a Sunday-school Missionary Society, we did not have a single candidate for the ministry. Since we have had our society, four young men have entered the ministry; another is a lay missionary in Korea; our first secretary is now the corresponding secretary of the Woman's Convention of the Maryland Synod. Other schools of our denomination have liked our plan and have organized societies along the same lines and are doing good work.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL OF THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY APOSTLES (PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL)
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Special Features: Thorough education in the Sunday-school proper and in auxiliary organizations, resulting in an offering of over $13,000 to Missions.

Missionary instruction in our school is imparted from the desk, in the classes, through the Babies' Branch, Junior and Senior Auxiliaries, by lantern illustrations, monthly visits (except during the summer months) of missionaries, deaconesses, physicians and teachers. It is never given as a substitute for the Sunday-school lesson.

The time allotted for the missionary instruction is about ten Sunday afternoons, ten afternoon meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary, weekly meetings of the Junior Auxiliaries, at which instruction and information is imparted by a deaconess, and a weekly meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society. Also a weekly meeting of a Junior and Senior Mothers' Guild.

Preparation of the teachers was covered by the above subjects. In addition, a weekly Church paper, a magazine "The Spirit of Missions," a Teachers' Instruction Class, a Men's Missionary Auxiliary, a Laymen's Forward Movement and access to a large Missionary Library, all aided the teachers in their work.

We have a missionary map of the world, a missionary chart and library, and the latter is much used by the teachers and members of the various missionary organizations.

Each year certain missionaries are maintained from our Easter offerings, generally some of those who have visited the school, and the scholars are urged to remember these in their prayers. As a constant reminder, their names are published in our monthly Parish paper.

Our scholars contribute systematically, mostly by means of Mite boxes. A majority of the classes have them, contributing through them in addition to the class offering.

The results of our missionary studies are, that we are the best informed Sunday-school in the Diocese, if not in the Church, upon the subject; that our scholars love the cause; as evidenced by our contributions to it, the largest of any school in the Church. The amount contributed as a special Easter and Lenten offering in 1909, including gifts of auxiliary organizations giving through the Sunday-school, was $13,161.10 an increase of $1,158.31 over the previous year.

WILLIAM S. NEILL,
Assistant Superintendent.

HARLEM AVENUE CHRISTIAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL

BALTIMORE, MD.

Special Features.—Enthusiastic superintendent—Use of text-books—Home preparation with definite assignments—Class and platform instruction—Correlation of the missionary work with the regular Bible lessons—Manual work.

Our school, in providing for its course of supplemental lessons, introduced into the school curriculum a three months' course of missionary study, covering the first quarter of 1908. The text-book selected was the Trull course of The Sunday School Times Co., embracing four lessons on the immigration problem (Home Missions) and six studies on India, the topics covering the following phases of missionary activities: Literary work, as exemplified through the life of the first great English missionary, William Carey; evangelistic and medical work was grouped around the two great type characters of America, Adoniram Judson and Dr. John Scudder, and educational work was portrayed through the powerful life of the first Scotch missionary, Alexander Duff.

The course, being graded to the Junior, Intermediate and Senior departments of the school, was heartily welcomed by the officers and teachers as a most timely help for implanting the missionary spirit in the Sunday-school on an educational foundation. The following mission study methods were used and found valuable in sustaining interest and enthusiasm in the work:

1. Each scholar was given a text-book, and home preparation of the lessons was required. This home study was secured by constant, carefully planned effort on the part of the teachers in assigning definite work to the scholars through looking up interesting points, and the like, and being sure to ask for the work assigned on the following Sunday. The co-operation of the parents was enlisted also when necessary.

2. The lessons were treated as supplemental work and taught by the teacher for the first ten minutes of the lesson-study period. They were co-ordinated with the regular International Sunday-school lesson for the day, the last twenty minutes of the study period being given to the International lesson.

3. The superintendent kept the school keyed up to the highest efficiency by definite and wisely-directed efforts. Every school session was distinctly missionary in character, both as to its opening and closing service. The hymns, Scripture readings, prayers, reviews, etc. were selected in reference to their influence on the pupil's life and character. A five-minute quiz was introduced into each opening service and made an educational test of the scholar's preparation and the teacher's work on the previous lesson. This served to review the work accomplished and helped to promote diligence and give intent, definiteness and purpose to the study, and also to show the character of the work that was expected of the school. This quiz was featured and made attractive with the aid of a series of large missionary pictures, recently published by the Young People's Missionary Movement, being photographic enlargements from most excellent snapshots of mission scenes in the Home and Foreign field. Maps, charts and live missionary items were also used with telling effect.

4. In the closing exercises, a crisp five-minute review from the desk tied up the essential facts of each missionary lesson, which were in all classes correlated with the central truth of the International Sunday-school lesson. This review was carefully planned to increase the teaching power of both lessons. Precise information of the work of our own Foreign Board, together with the fact of our having two members of the Sunday-school as Foreign missionaries at present in India, helped to strengthen and make forceful the plea of that needy field. In reviewing the lessons on the immigration problem, our convictions were made strong as to our duty to Americanize and Christianize the great hordes from Southern Europe, who are pouring in upon us, by giving these lessons a local application. This gave opportunity to present to the school the work of our local charitable and missionary enterprises and to present the claims of these organizations upon the school's benevolences.

5. To aid the pupils in expressing the aid received by oral teaching, their self-activities were employed through manual methods. Each class in the Intermediate and Senior departments was required to prepare note-books, and the entire missionary course was given back in note-book form, the several chapters in each book being written by different members of the class. The following extract from a circular letter by the superintendent, addressed to the teachers in the Intermediate and Senior departments, is of interest as showing the character of work required of the pupils in these note-books:

"From the Intermediate and Senior departments of the school we have assigned class note-books on the course of missionary instruction which we have just finished, and the following assignments and instructions are issued that there may be some uniformity in the work:

"Mr. Haylick's class, 'Life of William Carey'; Mrs. Brown's class, 'Life of Judson'; Mr. Rosenau's class, 'Life of Scudder'; Miss Horman's class, 'Life of Alexander Duff'; Mrs. Demming's class, 'Land and People of India'; Miss Ireland's class, 'Immigrants: Where They Come from and Why They Come'; Miss Garmong's class, 'Foreigners in Our Cities'; Miss Pryor's class, 'Foreigners Mining, Lumbering and Farming'; Mr. Moore's class, 'Immigration a Menace and a Mission'; Mr. Platt's class, 'History and Religions of India.'

"Inside paper and cover paper uniform in size, together with suitable pictures and maps, will be furnished by the school and issued to the teachers for the classes. The maps will be colored to show the political divisions of India and enforce the elevations, and to those scholars who may desire arrangements will be made in the training class-room to color the illustrations with water colors.

"The note-books on Foreign missions will show all the mission stations of our own Board, together with names and pictures of our missionaries.

"All books will have an appropriate title, such as 'On the Trail of the Emigrant,' 'Heroes of the Cross,' 'Mighty Men of Missions,' etc. Besides this title they will contain a preface giving the names of all scholars contributing to the work, and following the preface a selection of one or more verses from some missionary hymn that will fittingly express the thought of the contents of the note-book, like 'Faith of Our Fathers,' 'America,' 'From Greenland's Icy Mountains,' second verse, 'Watchman, Tell Us of the Night.'"

This course was distinctly helpful to the whole school in quickening the interest, sympathies and enthusiasm of the pupils, and training them in intelligent missionary support and service.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL OF THE COLLEGIATE CHURCH OF ST. NICHOLAS
(DUTCH REFORMED)
NEW YORK CITY.

Special Features: Small school—Interest aroused at first chiefly by the efforts of one teacher—Use of text-books—Curios, etc., used in desk reviews—Manual work before school session by scholars—Use of books in the public libraries by the teachers.

We have a very small school but find the course on "Great Heroes Among the Red Men" and "In the Dark Continent," published by The Sunday School Times Co., very interesting to the children and to the teachers as well. Each child is given a book at the beginning, those who lose them must pay 10 cents for another, except in unusual cases. We planned to use the ten minutes each Sunday after the regular lesson, which time is generally used for supplemental work, for each teacher to review the chapter on the missionary heroes. The superintendent then called the school together and either gave some fuller information on certain points himself, using the large map on the wall, or one of the teachers would do it. The map was the special field being studied.

On the Sunday when the books were first used, a talk was given from the platform of about ten to fifteen minutes, on the Indians in general, customs, traits; and several weapons, curios, arrows, etc., were shown. The war banner and moccasins especially interested the boys. Several things were pinned to the bulletin-board. Only one teacher would speak from the platform at first, then another offered, which makes three people to do it. Pictures were obtained, if possible, of the men studied, and placed on the bulletin-board.

At the session for Marcus Whitman, the story of his wonderful ride was given in detail and followed on the map; with Egerton Young, some interesting incident of his work not found in the text-book.

On the Sunday following the study of the last Indian hero, a talk was given on our own work among the Indians and what is going on now, with pictures of some of them, of our missionaries and a few curios, such as the dress used by those special tribes, and two interesting things which have happened at the stations, or instances of bravery shown by Christian Indians there. A letter was to have been read from one of our children at the Indian orphanage—no time.

The same ideas are being followed for the remaining lessons on Africa.

As our school meets before church, and the time is limited, we have not been able to have a regular missionary program to close the session.

The hymns and Scripture at the beginning of each session referred to the lesson for the day. The hand-work to be done during the course by those who come fifteen minutes early (at 9.30 A. M.), and to whom extra marks are given, is to illustrate a missionary hymn by scrap-book work. We are doing "From Greenland's Icy Mountains." Great interest has been shown by most of the children, only one as a rule, out of each class of six or seven children has neglected to read the lessons over beforehand. When possible, we have passed books from the public library around among the teachers, which books are referred to in the text-books.

We feel that if we could have some of the interesting ones referred to for children put in the Sunday-school library they would be well read.

OLIVET MEMORIAL CHURCH (UNDENOMINATIONAL) OF THE NEW YORK CITY MISSION

LOCATED ON THE LOWER EAST SIDE, NEW YORK.

Special Features: Use of stereopticon—Unique method by which even the poorest can give.

Sunday-school from 2.30 to 4 P. M. International lessons used.

The Sunday-school is organized as a "Missionary Association," to which every member of the school belongs, and which contributes to both Home and Foreign missions.

A good missionary map of the world is frequently shown and all the places where we have work are marked by red stars.

We have quarterly meetings on a week-day evening, usually with stereopticon pictures, and we have had as many as 500 at such a meeting.

On the last Sunday of each year instead of the regular Sunday-school, we have an "Annual Meeting," with the best speaker we can procure. Then the president reviews the work of the year, and explains carefully where the money has gone, and what it has accomplished.

The contributions are given regularly and systematically in Sunday-school, with special gifts by any who choose to contribute to a particular cause, and there are birthday envelopes, which the scholars use if they choose (putting in as many cents or dimes as they are years old). We have offerings at the quarterly meetings and the Home Department send in their offerings each quarter.

Our average attendance at Sunday-school is over five hundred, and our average annual amount raised for missionary work is $1,350. In our jubilee year it was over $1,500.

We never make a special effort, although the children of themselves bring in more the day of the annual meeting and on Easter Sunday. We used (long ago) to have jugs and other devices for raising money, but we decided it was better to train the children to give regularly than to make "spurts." Any child who is too poor to give, can earn a red ticket by learning the golden text or memory verses each Sunday, and the Sunday-school treasurer redeems these tickets at 1 cent each, so no child misses the opportunity of giving to the missionary cause.

II. THE SCHOOL IN THE SMALLER CITY OR TOWN.

FIRST BAPTIST BIBLE SCHOOL
WEST LYNN, MASS.

Special Features: Missionary specialist—Library well used—Missionary Rally Day—Missions emphasized in each lesson—Definite prayer and effort to secure missionary recruits.

We have a missionary secretary whose sole work it is to give her whole time and attention to the promotion of intelligent and effective study in the school. She is a young woman, college graduate, deeply interested in the work of missions, and is also president of a large and successful Woman's Missionary Society in our church.

On each Sunday during the regular session it is planned that she shall speak to two classes on the subject of missions. Her work is usually illustrated by the use of pictures or objects relating to the topic of the day. The whole school from the Primary department to the largest organized class is covered in this way. Of course her plan and methods of teaching have to be adapted to the varying needs.

At our regular teachers' study class on Friday evenings, she is allowed a few minutes to present before our workers the missionary application of the following Sunday's lesson. Her plan is, first of all, that every member might have an intelligent conception of Baptist missions, both Home and Foreign. Within a very few weeks we are to take China as a definite country and specialize on it for some little time to come.

Our library is from week to week being supplied with the very best and most interesting missionary books that we can find. These are not only put into the library, but are publicly announced from the platform, and a few words of commendation spoken of each book. There is always a rush to secure these books after this.

Every class in the school is provided with a very neat, attractive, informing missionary box. Even in the Senior and Adult departments, a large number of scholars use the boxes. Class and individual offerings are put into these boxes, and under the advice of our Sunday-school Cabinet will be divided as seems best for various missionary enterprises.

Sunday, March 22d, was our spring Missionary Rally Day. It was a grand success in point of numbers, interest and contributions. For many weeks in advance it was continually being brought before the church and the school by platform notices, also advertising in the daily papers. A large bulletin-board was used, announcing the plans of the day, with a space in the middle of the board, in which from week to week were put the most interesting and attractive missionary pictures on the market. The Rev. John M. Moore, of Boston, was the chosen speaker for the occasion. His photograph appeared in our local print on the Saturday night before our Rally Day, together with a history of his work, and the plans for the next day. This was good advertising.

As an incentive to encourage a large attendance, a valuable book was offered to every class having each one of its members present; this book to be presented to the teacher of the class as a mark of appreciation for services rendered from week to week. The result was that on our Rally Day 85 per cent. of our members were present and nineteen classes had every member there. The only excuse for absence allowed was sickness, which prevented one from being present. We gave to our Junior and Intermediate teachers "Uganda's White Man of Work," and to our Senior teachers, "The Uplift of China."

We use every available opportunity to emphasize the missionary side of the current Sunday-school lesson.

We definitely plan to remember in prayer the missionaries and their work. At the present time we are praying and working that three of our members might enlist either as Home or Foreign missionaries. We find that very gradually, in a strong, healthy manner, there is growing an intelligent zeal for missions.

RALPH W. BROWN,
Superintendent.

SOUTHSIDE BAPTIST SUNDAY-SCHOOL
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Special Features: Mission Study Class for teachers—Strong missionary spirit in the school—Large missionary offering.

We follow the International series of lessons. Missionary education is supplemental, and our school is thoroughly drilled along all missionary lines. The missionary lessons are studied once a month, but we keep this important subject before our scholars constantly. For the first three months of this year all of our collections in the school went to Foreign missions, and we raised the magnificent sum of $1,249. In our teachers' and workers' meeting we had a missionary study class during the entire three months, studying China—"The Uplift of China"—and we found this part of our meeting extremely interesting and helpful. Our pastor taught this part of the service. We have a missionary superintendent, and he keeps us thoroughly posted in regard to both Foreign and Home missions. We are now supporting a missionary in Japan and we keep in close touch with her and the work in that land. Our school is intensely spiritual, full of the missionary spirit and is doing mighty things for the Master along all missionary lines.

I honestly believe we have one of the best organized, progressive, aggressive and up-to-date schools on the American continent. It would do your heart good to be in one of our teachers' meetings—anywhere from 75 to 100 attend this meeting every Wednesday evening at 6.30, lasting until 8 o'clock.

J. B. MOSEBY.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL OF SUMMIT STREET UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH
DAYTON, OHIO.

Special Features: An enthusiastic Superintendent in the lead—Concrete suggestions furnished the teachers in each grade.

Immediately after reading the report of the Silver Bay Sunday-school Conference, August, 1906, I said: "That's just it. Missions is both pedagogical and evangelistic. It is one thing to know what the Gospel is. It is quite another to know what it does. Our school must know both, therefore we will have mission study which I conceive to be the kinetics of the Bible." Every month since we have had work like that described above, though we have been having offerings for years. My first attempt was to give talks from the desk. This seemed interesting and helpful, but I said: "The teachers must be doing something at this job." Then I had type-written manifold copies of questions, suggestions and references made for all teachers. This was fairly good, but I saw our work must be graded, so I made three lists, pedagogically adapted to Primary, Intermediate and Senior grades. This works better for both scholar and teacher. Of course, I suppose some teachers take less interest in this phase of the work than others, but in the main we think it is the thing.

During the year 1908-1909 about one hundred studied Home missions, "The Frontier," in the early part of the winter. After the holidays sixty or seventy engaged in the study of the denominational text-book, "Our Foreign Missionary Enterprise," which has for its several chapters the various fields of missionary effort of the United Brethren Church.

The next move that Summit Street Church should now be ready to inaugurate is the support of a Foreign or Home missionary in addition to our present gifts which are already far above the average of our denomination, but all too small for our ability and our privileges. Learning must be accompanied by doing; instruction by training, and feeling for missions by action in missions.

In all our work in the Sunday-school we are trying to make it "missions" rather than merely Home or Foreign, so either vary or combine our programs embodying both ideas.

Below is the material for a Missionary Sunday furnished by the superintendent to the teachers of the different departments.

PRIMARY DEPARTMENT.

Dear Mrs. Gilbert:—Next Sunday, September 27th, is Missionary Sunday. Will you kindly take up for ten minutes the topic the other departments study "The Cry of the City," and tell the children of the wretchedness and poverty of little children in slums. Try to show them how we can help them and how Jesus helped the poor people.

Ask to-day that they bring a special missionary gift for Missionary Sunday.

Yours very kindly,

W. G. CLIPPINGER.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT.

Missionary Sunday.

September 27, 1908.

Dear Teacher:—This month our missionary topic is an intensely practical one, "The Cry of the City." Take as much of the lesson hour as possible, all if you choose, beginning at the opening. Encourage a good offering.

Assign questions to-day. Scripture, Genesis 18: 16-33.

I suggest something like the following for a plan:

1. Tell briefly the charming story of how noble Abraham pleaded for wicked Sodom.

2. Then tell a story of conditions in a modern city with its thousands of both good and bad people. Tell of the poverty, suffering, hunger, filth, wickedness and vice prevailing, and show how little innocent children, boys and girls, must grow up in these conditions.

3. Ask your scholars how they think we can help them. Tell them of social settlement work, of institutional churches, of charity homes, etc.

4. Then show them that this is just the spirit of Jesus working in practical life.

To warm your heart on this, read Chapter V of Strong's "Challenge of the City," studied last year by our young people. Refer also to The Sunday School Times, "Watchword" and "Telescope" for this date.

I am wishing you a rich blessing in the consideration of this vital topic.

Very kindly,

Your Superintendent,

W. G. CLIPPINGER.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT.

Missionary Topic.

Sunday, Sept. 27, 1908.

Dear Teacher:—This month our missionary topic is an intensely practical one, "The Cry of the City." Take plenty of time at the beginning of the lesson hour, use the entire hour if you choose. Encourage a good offering from your class.

Assign questions to-day. Scripture, Genesis 18: 16-33.

1. Discuss briefly in a few words the old story of Sodom and Abraham's pleading for it.

2. Picture a modern city swarming with both good and bad people.

3. Tell your class that nearly half (47 per cent.) of the people of America live in cities, and the vast majority are poor, ignorant and unchurched.

4. Then raise the question of the obligation of the modern church to these people. How can we help them? How improve physical and social conditions? How best carry the gospel to them? Should good people go to live and work among them? Would you be willing to do it? What was Jesus' way?

Read Chapter V of Strong's "Challenge of the City," the mission book studied last year by our young people. Also the last page of The Sunday School Times for September 12th and notes in the "Watchword" and "Telescope" on the topic.

I am wishing you a rich blessing in the teaching of this vital subject.

Very truly,

Your Superintendent,

W. G. CLIPPINGER:

FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL (SOUTH)
MEMPHIS, TENN.

Special Features: Systematic instruction—Support of specific work on the field, with which the school is in frequent communication—Use of stereopticon.

In our Beginners department we have an offering for missions every Sunday, as the little children insist on doing this loving service every week. In all the other departments we observe the first Sunday of each month as the Missionary Sunday. On each date we not only take an offering, but our plan as far as possible is to present in each department some particular mission field, biography, or some such matter as will interest our pupils in the particular work of our mission fields.

In view of the fact that we help support a missionary in Korea and also have a native missionary in Korea and have for a good many years assisted one of our missionaries in Japan and one in China, we have a good many communications from them, which are read in order to give the school a vital interest in our own representatives in the foreign field. We have had a number of stereopticon views and very interesting lectures concerning these various fields. Whenever we can have returned missionaries visit us, we always have them speak to the school.

During the past year we have aided in building a school-house in Korea, and we are now building a boat, on one of the rivers in Korea, to be used in connection with two of our missionary stations in that country.

So you see we have been keeping in right close touch with our great missionary work, and it is surely true that the more that is known of this chief work of the Church the larger the interest will be.

J. R. PEPPER,
Superintendent.

ELMWOOD TEMPLE CONGREGATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Special Features: Remarkable results, due largely to one enthusiast—Instruction first in a single department, gradually spreading to the whole school—Unique programs by different departments.

Our Primary Sunday-school has definite missionary instruction for five minutes the first Sunday of each month, at which time a missionary collection is taken.

This instruction consists of definitions, songs, prayers, incidents and descriptions of the school and work of the Caesarea Kindergarten, to which a contribution is regularly made.

Our home work has been for a Sunday-school in the West to which toys, books and papers and money have been sent each year. Of late our work for the Indians has been studied, the children making scrap-books and patch-work for their schools. We plan to have a social at which there will be children dressed in Indian costume, and tepees from which refreshments shall be served, and a program to show what is being done among the Indians.

Our Sunday-school session is from quarter past twelve to half past one, a half hour being given to the study of the International lessons. With opening and closing exercises, remarks by the superintendent, and the lesson, the hour and a quarter is soon exhausted. Our Junior and Intermediate departments meet together. There is no supplemental teaching and there seems to be an aversion to any innovations.

Somewhat over a year ago a teacher who was the leader of a missionary society of sixteen young ladies, all members of the school, offered the services of this society as a Missionary Committee. Their first work consisted in marking the quarterly Missionary Sunday by special exercises, participated in by scholars drilled by members of the committee.

Before our next collection a mite box was given to each class and by free-will offerings and earnings our contribution was more than doubled.

For ten years we have had a missionary library and have never succeeded in having it read. So the following plan was adopted:

In the first place we felt that the books we had were too advanced for those of Junior age, and so the Sunday-school voted to enlarge its library by putting in the Juvenile Missionary Library. Four of these books were reserved for the prizes in the reading contest. The remaining six were covered and listed for Junior readers or those from the ages of ten to fifteen years. We already had twelve books for those from fifteen and above. A committee of three missionary workers, all strangers to our Sunday-school, prepared a list of ten questions on each of these books, which was pasted in the front of the books.

Then announcement was made that a reward would be given to the boy and girl of Junior age who should read three books and answer most intelligently the questions in the front of one of these books. Also a reward to the Senior boy and girl who would fulfill the same conditions for their library. Three months were given for the reading and there were some simple rules regulating the contest. Thirty entered into it—nineteen Juniors and eleven Seniors, and personal work will bring more. The Junior books are in such demand that they are drawn before Sunday-school and one boy who had said he “hated missionary reading,” stayed in on Saturday afternoon to answer the questions on “Heroes of the South Seas,” instead of playing ball as usual. Another boy who drew one of Alger’s books and “Uganda’s White Man of Work” on the same Sunday, said that the latter beat the former all to pieces. The three who prepared the questions are to be judges.

Our collections have been given alternately to our Foreign and Home Boards.

Our school numbers about two hundred, seventy of this number, perhaps, being Primary pupils.

MRS. GEORGIA M. ROOT.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL OF SAINT LUKE’S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

SAINT JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK, CANADA.

Special Features: Teachers urged to use Missionary illustrations published by the Missionary Committee of the Canadian Church—Use of charts, pictures, diagrams, etc.—Practical missionary activities—Dedication of life to missionary service.

We hold our sessions at 2.30 P. M., for one hour. The lessons used are the International, adapted to the Church Seasons, as published by our Anglican Church in Canada.

In the highest grades of our school, we conduct series of studies in the Book of Acts with the purpose of teaching Church polity and expansion with their present day application to missions. We take advantage of every opportunity to have returned missionaries address the school, we urge our teachers to use missionary illustrations in their teaching, these illustrations being furnished to us by the Missionary Committee of our Canadian Church in the way of excerpts from the missionary publications. Once a month we devote all the offertory to missions, having on that Sunday a special form of service for opening and closing the session, and a ten-minute talk given the scholars by some one arranged for by our Sunday-school Missionary Committee.

We decorate our walls with missionary charts, diagrams, maps and pictures. We have letters regularly from those missionaries who have gone from our own school, and these are read from the desk. We have a number of clubs and some of the classes are organized for the purpose of working for these missionaries, making articles for use in the mission hospitals and schools. We find that this helps much to put missions in the concrete and clothe them with reality.

There is no division made between Home, Domestic and Foreign work. All is considered as missions, and always the principle that the Church exists solely for the purpose of preaching the gospel in all the world is placed in the most prominent place.

The result of our efforts in the missionary cause have been that from a last place on the list missions have come to occupy the first place in both Church and School, and best of all never a year goes by that God does not come to us and take at least one of our Sunday-school teachers for His work in the wider field.

We plan to continue our definite mission work and have pledged ourselves to double our contribution to missions this year.

R. P. McKIM.

ST. STEPHEN'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL

LYNN, MASS.

Special Features: Missions taught by a specialist--Home work by pupils.

The length of our Sunday-school session is one hour, with forty-five minutes for the lesson. We use a series of lessons of our own. Our supplemental work is of two kinds, memory work and mission work. The mission work is conducted by a special teacher, progressively, beginning with the third grade Primary and running through five grades of the Grammar and two of the High. The school is graded like a day-school. The mission lesson is always supplemental and never a substitution. Fifteen minutes is required for teaching the lesson, which is largely biographical. The work is on consecutive Sundays and runs through the entire year. Instruction is given in the classes after the regular lesson, all classes of the same grade meeting together while the rest of the school is having its closing service in the church. The special teacher does nothing else in the school but teach missions. She is qualified, and well qualified, by natural teaching ability and by knowledge of her subject. The pupils do satisfactory home work, consisting of the reproduction of the story as she gives it.

The pupils contribute to Foreign missions through the Junior Auxiliary, which supports a day-school for girls in China, and through the Sunday-school offerings, which support another day-school, also by Lenten offerings, which go for general missions.

Both Home and Foreign missions are included in the course. The work commends itself to pupils and teachers alike, the pupils oftentimes expressing more interest in that part of the work than in any other. We do indeed plan to continue missionary instruction in the school.

ERNEST J. DENNEN,
Rector.

April 9, 1908.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL,
TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Special Features: Use of text-books—Thorough preparation of teachers—Home study by pupils and special assignments given them—Large financial returns as a result of adequate instruction.

A systematic study of missions has recently been begun, with most encouraging indications of enthusiasm and practical results. "Missionary Studies for the Sunday-school," published by The Sunday School Times Co., has been introduced as a text-book, one copy being furnished to each family represented in the Senior, Normal and Intermediate Departments. The teachers of the Primary Department, but not the pupils, are also provided with a copy, and all departments except the Beginners' are engaged in the study.

The first lesson on "The Mountaineers" was assigned for study on March 22d, replacing the Quarterly Review. The entire study period of thirty minutes was given to it, and the lesson was presented in each class by the teacher.

Much preparatory work was done to ensure the success of the lesson. A teachers' dinner followed by a program, is held monthly, with an average attendance of fifty. At the dinner preceding March 22d, the superintendent conducted a model lesson on the Mountain Whites, treating the teachers as a class and using the missionary text-book. A list of books bearing on this subject to be found in the city library was placed upon the blackboard.

The text-books were distributed two weeks in advance and pupils were asked to come prepared on the lesson. Many teachers assigned special topics for papers and talks.

The results were most gratifying. From the Primary Department up to the Brotherhood class, teachers reported that classes were enthusiastically interested, and enjoyment of the lesson was universal.

The offering the following week amounted to $46.51. Three dollars and forty-nine cents were added by the teachers; $50 was sent to Harlan Institute, and the school felt a pride and pleasure in knowing that it had done something definite for the Mountain Whites.

The Easter egg coin cards provided by the Board for an Easter offering for Foreign missions were distributed four weeks before Easter. Their purpose was explained in a sentence, but there was a careful refraining from any urging of large offerings, the desire being to have the offering merely register the increased missionary interest which the new knowledge and the new plans are creating. These plans look rather to the education of those who will compose the church of the future, in permanent missionary zeal and sense of responsibility, than to securing large, spasmodic gifts in the present under special pressure. The Easter offering was $78, by far the largest ever received in the school.

The pastor, superintendents and teachers are all heartily enthusiastic over the systematic study of missions and its results. They believe that such work as this in the Sunday-schools of to-day, where the church of to-morrow is receiving its ideals and standards of church duty, is going to do more than anything else to secure a church loyal to its Master's command to evangelize the world.

HELEN ROLLAND ESTEY,
Superintendent.

III. THE SCHOOL IN THE SUBURBS OR COUNTRY.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

BELLEVUE, PA.

Special Features: Use of text-books—Manual Work—Vital prayer.

Our school begins at 9.30 and dismisses at 10.50 A. M. We use the International lessons in all grades.

The Junior and Intermediate departments took up missions as supplemental work during the last quarter of the year. We finished the quarter with a missionary rally on Christmas Sunday. On this day we took the missionary collection for the year and it was the largest in the history of the school. We feel that this was the result of teaching missions the quarter preceding.

In the Junior department the first-year pupils studied Alaska and the second-year pupils Japan.

In the Intermediate department we used "Coming Americans," by Katherine Crowell, for the younger pupils, and "Uganda's White Man of Work" for pupils from fourteen to sixteen years of age.

We devoted the first twenty minutes of the lesson period to the missionary study and then had the International lesson taught briefly. In the Junior department the teachers taught the missionary lesson and the superintendent taught the International lesson from the desk. In the Intermediate department the teacher taught both lessons.

The only preparation that the teachers had was that we gave them the books with lesson helps a month ahead and explained how we wanted the work done.

I taught "Uganda's White Man of Work" to a class of girls during August and September, but was more fortunate than the other teachers, because I had a class-room. We used a map of the world, blackboard and note-book. The girls willingly prepared a chapter for each Sunday and all took part in the class work. I asked each pupil to write for me a story from the Bible that they thought should have been left for Mutesa when Stanley left Uganda.

R. JANE HAMMOND,
Superintendent Intermediate Department.

CANADIAN PRESBYTERIAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL WESTON, ONTARIO.

Special Features: A splendid illustration of what can be done in a small village Sunday-school of 100 scholars—Formerly no missionary interest; now, largely through leadership of the Superintendent, the school believes that Missions is the essence of the gospel, hence taught every Sunday—Frequent use of the stereopticon—Results, united definite prayer; largely increased gifts to specific work at home and abroad; one of the former teachers now a missionary in Africa and two young men in the school will likely become ministers or missionaries.

Our school is only a village school with an average attendance of 100, but it is alive to the great work that is to be done. We were in debt and doing nothing outside of ourselves.

Our first start in missions was at Christmas. The school had always had a Christmas tree at considerable expense. We had a talk with the scholars and told them how some of the poor children in Toronto were destitute and did not have even enough to eat. The scholars became interested at once, so we decided to have a social instead of the tree. The city missionary came out, we used the lantern illustrating the great need in the city. The admission was any kind of food, produce or clothing. A wagon load was sent into the city mission; it was a decided success, and this was the beginning of missions in our school.

From this small beginning we kept on increasing in mission work. Mite boxes were introduced, definite work planned, Home Department started. An Adult Bible Class was organized by Mr. Sanderson, one of our teachers, who through the mission work in our school became a volunteer for the field, and is now in the Soudan mission in Africa. He is entirely supported by the class, at the rate of four hundred dollars per year, and all subscribed for three years. The class is called the George Sanderson Bible Class. Monthly letters are received from Mr. Sanderson, and a copy is sent to each subscriber.

We give missionary instruction by doing practical and definite work. Tin mite boxes $3\frac{1}{4} \times 2\frac{1}{4} \times 1$, are used every Sunday by the unorganized classes. Their use has not decreased but increased the general offering of the school. The teacher keeps the box and when filled gets another one, brings it to the school every Sunday. At Christmas time it is part of our entertainment, opening the boxes. The collections from these boxes support our Mr. Jow, a native helper in Honan, the balance going to help our Knox college student in our Home field. Of course, there is the regular collection as well.

The young ladies' class have their own definite work, also the young men's. The Adult Bible Class have their Mr. Sanderson. The Home Department support a pupil at the Pointe aux Trembles school in Quebec.

We find the lantern the most effective way to teach missions in the school, as it impresses the lessons on the child's mind that will never be forgotten.

We illustrate the lesson with a Bible picture. The mission thought in the lesson, with a mission picture and story from our own missionaries if possible.

We use missionary hymns at every opportunity, illustrated with mission pictures from the Home and Foreign fields. For instance, "Stand Up for Jesus" is illustrated with a photo of our missionary, Mrs. Mitchell, with her girls of the mission school in Honan standing up for Christ.

Our scholars are now becoming so interested in missions that we cannot give them too much missionary information.

Every Sunday in our school is a Mission Sunday. We don't know how to teach in any other way. We take the word mission to mean doing something outside of our school, helping somebody, the gospel, spreading the good news.

Definite prayers for our own workers and the missionaries of the fields of our church are offered up in the pulpit, Sunday-school, Adult Bible Class, in private and at the family altar.

We are out of debt. The spiritual uplift that missions have given to our own school and church cannot be estimated. The definite work being done, especially the supporting of Mr. Sanderson, has added new life to our church members. Young men in the Adult class who never thought of offering up a public prayer can now take part in meetings and pray. From the missionary effort made in our school it is noticeable that two more young men will likely give themselves to the ministry or the Foreign field.

The Lantern Slide Department of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, which supplies slides and lantern outfits at cost, is an outgrowth of the missionary effort in our Sunday-school.

FREDERICK W. MOFFAT,
Superintendent.

This order is suggested where the regular Bible lesson of the day is given a missionary interpretation. Numbers 5, 6, 8 and 9 would not all be used on the same Missionary Sunday, but one or two of them, as advisable. All are introduced here simply to demonstrate their general use and value.

The time basis on which this program has been prepared allows a session of one hour and a quarter. If more or less time is given, the program can be altered correspondingly.

I. Opening Exercises. Twenty-five minutes.

1. Hymn. (One of general worship.)
2. Hymn. (One of missionary character.)
3. Invocation, closing with the Lord's Prayer.
4. Missionary Hymn, to be sung from memory, without use of hymn-books. (Use something familiar.)
5. Map Drill. (Showing location of the mission work of the denomination, using a missionary map of the world.)

Books suggested are, "Uganda's White Man of Work," by Mrs. S. L. Fahs; "Topsy Turvy Land," by Zwemer; "Knights Who Fought the Dragon," by Leslie; "My Dogs in the Northland," by Young; "The Vanguard," by Gale, and others of like character. The first two are in the Juvenile Missionary Library, ten volumes for $5, to be obtained from your denominational Board.

Program for Sunday, March 22, 1908, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Sunday-school, New York City

Hymn, "God loved the world of sinners lost."

Prayer (special thanksgiving that Jesus, the Life and the Light of men, has been revealed to us).

Hymn, "There's a wideness in God's mercy."

Scripture, selected verses from the Gospel of John, from Isaiah, and from Zechariah.

JESUS, THE LIFE and the LIGHT OF MEN.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life."

"He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life: but he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

"And this is the judgment, that light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than light."

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth him that sent me, hath eternal life, and cometh not into judgment, but hath passed out of death into life."

"For as the Father hath life in himself, so gave he to the Son also to have life in himself."

"In him was life; and the life was the light of men."

"I am the bread of life."

"I am the living bread which came down out of heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread which I will give is my flesh, for the life of the world."

PIANO PRELUDE.

ALL RISE AND SING: "The Morning Light." No. 327

The morning light is breaking,
 The darkness disappears;
 The sons of earth are waking
 To penitential tears;
 Each breeze that sweeps the ocean
 Brings tidings from afar,
 Of nations in commotion,
 Prepared for Zion's war.

Blest river of salvation,
 Pursue thine onward way;
 Flow thou to every nation,
 Nor in thy richness stay;
 Stay not till all the lowly,
 Triumphant reach their home;
 Stay not till all the holy Proclaim, "The Lord is come!"

Program, Sunday, December 29, 1907, Olivet Memorial Church, New York City. Fifty-second Anniversary of the Missionary Association

1. Singing, "Once Again the Bells Are Ringing."

2. Bible answers to missionary questions.

Who are missionaries?

"We are ambassadors therefore on behalf of Christ, as though God were entreating by us: we beseech you on behalf of Christ, be ye reconciled to God."

Are there enough missionaries?

"The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few."

What is our duty then?

"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest."

What is the state of the heathen world?

"The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty."

What can take away its darkness?

"Therefore Jesus spake unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in the darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Why do they not worship the true God?

"How shall they believe in him whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent?"

Do the heathen want the gospel?

"A vision appeared to Paul in the night: There was a man of Macedonia standing, beseeching him, and saying, Come over into Macedonia; and help us."

Have the gospel messages always been gladly received by the heathen?

"Some fell on rocky places . . . others fell upon the thorns . . . and others fell upon the good ground."

Does God care for the heathen?

"Thus saith the Lord Jehovah, Behold, I will lift up my hand to the nations."

Did Jesus come to save them?

"Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring."

Who are sent to bring them in?

"Ye shall be my witnesses unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Who sends these witnesses?

"Then said Jesus to them, As my father hath sent me, even so send I you."

What is the "great commission"?

"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit."

Who were the first missionaries?

"The Holy Spirit said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."

Can children be missionaries?

"The Syrians had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maiden; and she said unto her mistress, Would that my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him."

Is there any danger in a missionary life?

"Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake."

What have missionaries suffered?

"They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword; they went about . . . destitute, afflicted, ill-treated."

Why did Jesus permit this?

"The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord."

What help has Jesus promised?

"Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

What have missionaries accomplished?

"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwelt in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined."

Has God promised them success?

"From the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my name shall be great among the Gentiles." "As I live, saith the Lord, to me every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess to God."

What reward has Jesus promised?

"They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

When will missions end?

"The gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations; and then shall the end come."

What will then be the state of the world?

"The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea."

3. Thanksgiving and Prayer.

4. Brief Report of Treasurer.

5. Report of Nominating Committee and Election of Officers for 1908.

6. Singing, "Now Be the Gospel Banner."

7. Responsive Service.—Bringing gifts to Jesus.

Leader.—Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, Wise-men from the east came to Jerusalem.

School.—Saying. Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we saw his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

Leader.—And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search out exactly concerning the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word, that I may also come and worship him.

School.—And they, having heard the king, went their way; and lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.

Leader.—And when they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

School.—And they came into the house and saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and opening their treasures, they presented unto him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh.

All.—The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall render tribute, the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him.

Leader.—What will most please Jesus?

School.—"Son, daughter, give me thy heart."

Leader.—Every loving act is giving to Jesus.

School.—If we have no gold, frankincense or myrrh, have we not the water of life?

All.—Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward. Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren even these least, ye did it unto me.

8. Singing, "As With Gladness Men of Old."

9. Offering.

10. Great Words from Great Pioneer Missionaries. 1. William Carey. 2. Adoniram Judson. 3. David Brainerd. 4. Robert Morrison. 5. David Livingstone.

11. Address on Mission Work in Korea. The Rev. Ernest F. Hall.

12. Singing, "Shall We Whose Souls Are Lighted."

13. Closing Words.

14. Singing, "The Whole Wide World for Jesus!"

BENEDICTION.

Monday, December the twenty-third, was the seventieth birthday of our fine old missionary, Rev. G. S. Jones, of Hendersonville, North Carolina, and a telegram was sent to him, conveying congratulations and good wishes from Olivet Sunday-school. We have helped to support Mr. Jones for over twenty-five years.

APPENDIX B

A Missionary Equipment and its Cost

As it is necessary for a workman to have tools, so must the Missionary Committee if results are to be obtained. Because his tools cost something, the workman is not deterred from securing them, for without them his ability and skill remain unutilized. Nor should the Missionary Committee in any Sunday-school be deterred from setting to work because a certain outlay of money is necessary for equipment. Certain things are absolutely indispensable for the maintenance of the church life in any locality, and when once the church fully realizes its pressing obligation to fulfil the command of Christ regarding world-wide evangelization, then the work of the Missionary Committee in the Sunday-school will be regarded as fundamental to the church's very existence and growth. Until the church at large awakes to the fact that much more money must be spent on the educational side of her work, and equips her Sunday-schools for efficient service, there will be little accomplished in the extension of the Kingdom.

After all, the cost of a missionary equipment with which to begin is not at all excessive. For $5, or even less, a good start can be made. If more money is available, additional supplies can be secured. Indicated below are certain things that are valuable for general and department equipment, and the approximate cost of the material.

HOW AMERICANS SPEND THEIR MONEY

"The Signs of the Times" presents the accompanying striking contrast for Christian Americans to consider.

[illegible]

deduct 20,000,000 from our population the number who do not indulge in these unnecessary, such as small children, paupers and the aged, the remaining 60,000,000 average $58 per year each on the selfish pleasures of life, while the same number average but twelve and one-half cents each year on foreign missions. Is it not time for each one to ask himself, "How do I spend my money?"
